CONTRIBUTORS

TODD F. DAVIS is the author of three full-length collections of poetry, most recently The Least of These and Some Heaven, both from Michigan State University Press. He teaches creative writing, American literature, and environmental studies at Penn State Altoona.

AHMED GAMAL, associate professor of English and comparative literature in the Faculty of Arts, Ain Shams University, Egypt, teaches cultural studies, British literature, and translation. He was a Fulbright visiting scholar at Columbia University in 2010–11. His latest article, on Tariq Ali's postcolonial metafiction, appeared in South Asian Review.

JAMES GIFFORD is assistant professor of English and director of the University Core at Fairleigh Dickinson University, Vancouver. He is most active in trans-Atlantic modernist and twentieth-century literature, in particular antiauthoritarian poetry networks. He has been equally active in music performance and cultural studies.

SCOTT HUBBARD is a graduate student in the English education master's program at Colorado State University, where he also completed a BA in English with a concentration in literature. His research interests include the intersection of literature and historic Christian theology and the integration of story in secondary education.

MARK STURGES is a doctoral candidate in American literature at Penn State University. His dissertation explores the relationship between environmental literature and land policy in the early American Republic.

MICHAEL K. WALONEN is an assistant professor of English at Bethune-Cookman University. He is the author of Writing Tangier in the Postcolonial Transition: Space and Power in Expatriate and North African Literature and numerous articles on expatriate literature, travel writing, and social geographic approaches to literature.

JOSEPH J. WARD teaches English at Saint Leo University in southwest Florida. He received his BA and MA in English literature from the University of South Florida and his Juris Doctor degree from Florida State University. His academic areas of interest include the relationship between literature, cognitive psychology, and philosophy.
