

Pedagogy seeks to create a discourse surrounding teaching in English studies by fusing theoretical approaches and practical realities. As a journal devoted exclusively to pedagogical issues, it is a forum for critical reflection as well as a site for spirited and informed debate from a multiplicity of positions and perspectives. The journal strives to reverse the long-standing marginalization of teaching and the scholarship produced around it and instead to assert the centrality of teaching to our work as scholars and professionals.

Founding Coeditors

Jennifer L. Holberg, Calvin University
Marcy Taylor, Central Michigan University

Associate Editors

Elizabeth Brockman, From the Classroom
Central Michigan University
Kristine Johnson
Calvin University
Mark C. Long, Reviews
Keene State College

Editorial Assistant

Abigail J. Ham

Editorial Board

Barclay Barrios, Florida Atlantic University
Michael Bérubé, Pennsylvania State University
David Bleich, University of Rochester

Ellen Carillo, University of Connecticut
Sheila T. Cavanagh, Emory University
Shawn Christian, Florida International University
Danielle Nicole DeVoss, Michigan State University
Rasha Diab, University of Texas at Austin
Gerald Graff, University of Illinois Chicago
Salah Hassan, Michigan State University
Deborah Holdstein, Columbia College Chicago
Ann Jurecic, Rutgers University
Kristopher M. Lotier, Hofstra University
Richard E. Miller, Rutgers University
E. Shelley Reid, George Mason University
Shari Stenberg, University of Nebraska–Lincoln
Theresa Tinkle, University of Michigan
Gary Weissman, University of Cincinnati
Stephen Yandell, Xavier University