I created "Spyware Advice" by using Google and then mixing advertisements and articles containing anti-spyware information. While writing a series of poems about vision and eyeglasses, I brainstormed some words. I thought of the glasses my son played with as a child which allowed him to see a small space behind him: "spyglasses." Then "spyware" became another consideration. Words emerged as did subjects for poems. Since "spyware" is associated with computers, the Internet was an appropriate place to go. I selected phrases from random places. The first line, "Beware of current privacy threats," was a statement which prompted me to continue to write more, to look for more words.

I have a fascination for the imperative and the instructional voice, and often read advertisements on the Internet when I want to write.

CATHY McARTHUR (aka Cathy Palermo) has poetry forthcoming in Gargoyle and Hanging Loose. Her work has appeared in Lumina, Jacket, Ozone Park, Pro-methean, The Memphis State Review and Xconnect Writers of the Information Age.
