Simon Beck is Professor of Philosophy at the University of the Western Cape. His central research interests are in problems in the broad area of personal identity, both substantial and methodological. Amongst his recent publications in this area are ‘These Bizarre Fictions: Thought-Experiments, Our Psychology and Our Selves’, Philosophical Papers 35, no.1 (2006) and ‘Causal Co-Personality: In Defence of the Psychological Continuity Theory’, South African Journal of Philosophy 30, no.2 (2011). He can be contacted via email at sbeck@uwc.ac.za

S. Nassir Ghaemi is a psychiatric researcher with expertise in bipolar disorder, and training in philosophy and public health. His research has focused on clinical psychopharmacology of treatments for depression and bipolar disorder, including clinical trials of antidepressants and antipsychotic agents. He has also studied the psychopathology and nosology of mood illnesses, including the concept of the bipolar spectrum. He has also published over 150 scientific articles or book chapters, and serves on the editorial board of numerous journals, including Acta Psychiatrica Scandinavica, Bipolar Disorders, and the Journal of Affective Disorders. He also serves on the executive committee of the Association for the Advancement of Philosophy and Psychiatry; is a Distinguished Fellow of the American Psychiatric Association; and has served as chairman of the Diagnostic Guidelines Task Force of the International Society for Bipolar Disorders (2005–2008). He can be contacted via email at NGhaemi@tufts-nemc.org

Grant Gillett is a qualified neurosurgeon and practiced until 2006. He is now a Professor of Medical Ethics at the Bioethics Centre of the Medical School, and a fellow of the Royal Society. He is author of The Mind and its Discontents (2009), Subjectivity and Being Somebody: Human Identity and Neuroethics. (2008), Bioethics in the Clinic: Hippocratic Reflections (2004), and nearly 300 articles in philosophy, bioethics, the philosophy of psychiatry and neuroscience. He can be contacted via email at grant.gillett@otago.ac.nz

Jennifer Hansen earned her MA in Philosophy from Boston College, and her PhD in Philosophy from SUNY at Stony Brook. She is a Professor and Chair of the Philosophy Department at St. Lawrence University. With Ann J. Cahill, she is the co-editor of Continental Feminism Reader (Rowman and Littlefield, 2003), French Feminists (Routledge, 2008), as well as the author of numerous articles and book chapters including recently, “Is Prozac a Feminist Drug?” (International Journal of Feminist Approaches to Bioethics) and “What’s So Great About Nature?” (Journal of Speculative Philosophy). She can be contacted via email at jhansen@stlawu.edu

Drew Leder is the author of many articles and books on the phenomenology of the body, and the philosophy of medicine, including The Absent
Body, (University of Chicago Press), as well as popular/scholarly works on cross-cultural spirituality (“Sparks of the Divine”, “Games for the Soul,”) aging (“Spiritual Passages”), and imprisonment (“The Soul Knows No Bars”). He can be contacted via email at dleder@loyola.edu

David Lumsden studied philosophy at the University of London and Princeton University, from where he received his doctorate. He has taught for many years at the University of Waikato, New Zealand. His main research areas are the Philosophy of Language and the Philosophy of Mind. The journals he has published in include: Philosophical Studies, Pacific Philosophical Quarterly, Journal of Pragmatics, Erkenntnis and Philosophical Psychology. He can be contacted via email at d.lumsden@waikato.ac.nz

Katherine J. Morris has been a fellow in philosophy at Mansfield College, Oxford University, UK for many years; she also lectures on Anthropology of the Body and Gender for medical anthropologists and teaches a course on Women and their Bodies for women’s studies students. Her recent books include Sartre (Blackwell 2008), Starting with Merleau-Ponty (Continuum 2012), and (as editor) Sartre on the Body (Palgrave MacMillan 2010). Relevant articles include “Body Image Disorders”, forthcoming in the Oxford Handbook of Philosophy and Psychiatry, ed. K.W.M. Fulford et al. She also co-edits the series International Perspectives in Philosophy and Psychiatry for Oxford University Press. She can be contact via email at katherine.morris@philosophy.ox.ac.uk

James Phillips is Associate Clinical Professor of Psychiatry at the Yale School of Medicine and in the private practice of psychiatry in Milford, Connecticut. He has written on a variety of issues in the interface of philosophy and psychiatry, as well as of philosophy and psychoanalysis. He is co-editor with James Morley of Imagination and Its Pathologies (MIT Press), and editor of Philosophical Perspectives on Technology and Psychiatry (Oxford University Press). He is co-editor with Joel Paris of The Making of DSM-5: Concepts and Controversies (Springer, in press). He is the editor of the Bulletin of the Association for the Advance-ment of Philosophy and Psychiatry. He can be contacted via email at james.phillips@yale.edu

Nancy Potter is Professor of Philosophy at the University of Louisville. Her research interests primarily are in personality disorders, psychiatric ethics, and intersections of cultural, nosological, and treatment practices in psychiatry. She has written a book on trust and trustworthiness called How Can I Be Trusted? A Virtue Theory of Trustworthiness (Rowman-Littlefield 2002), an edited anthology Trauma, Truth, and Reconciliation: Healing Damaged Relationships (Oxford University Press 2006) and the book Mapping the Edges and the In-Between: A Critical Analysis of Borderline Personality Disorder (Oxford University Press 2009). She is currently working on a book on defiance as a virtue and psychiatric norms. She teaches classes on virtue ethics, ethical theory, philosophy and mental illness, and race, gender, and mental illness, and is core faculty of the Interdisciplinary Masters’ Program in Bioethics and Medical Humanities. She serves as ethics consultant on-site at Emergency Psychiatric Services weekly. She can be reached via email at nancy.potter@louisville.edu

Marya Schechtman is Professor of Philosophy at the University of Illinois at Chicago. She is the author of The Constitution of Selves and numerous articles on personal identity. She can be reached via email at marya@uic.edu

Fredrik Svenaeus’s main research areas are philosophy of medicine, bioethics, and philosophical anthropology. He has published a number of articles and books on these subjects, most often from a phenomenological point of view, for instance: The Hermeneutics of Medicine and the Phenomenology of Health: Steps towards a Philosophy of Medical Practice (Kluwer 2000); “The Ethics of Self-Change: Becoming Oneself by Way of Antidepressants or Psychotherapy?”, Medicine, Health Care and Philosophy (12, no. 2, 2009); and “What is an Organ? Heidegger and the Phenomenology of Organ Transplantation,” in Theoretical Medicine and Bioethics (31, no. 3, 2010). He can be contacted via email at fredrik.svenaeus@sh.se
Serife Tekin is a Postdoctoral Research Fellow at the Center for Philosophy of Science at University of Pittsburgh. She received her PhD in 2010 at York University, Canada. Between 2010 and 2012, she was a Postdoctoral Research Fellow in neuroethics at Dalhousie University, Canada. Her scholarly interests are in philosophy of science, philosophy of mind, and ethics. Her recent publications include “Self-concept Through the Diagnostic Looking Glass: Narratives and Mental Disorder,” published in Philosophical Psychology, in 2011; “Will I be Pretty Will I be Rich? The Missing Self in Antidepressant Commercials,” forthcoming in the American Journal of Bioethics; and “The Missing Self in Hacking’s Looping Effects,” forthcoming in Mental Kinds and Natural Kinds, H. Kincaid and J. A. Sullivan, eds. (MIT Press). She can be contacted via email at serife.tekin@gmail.com.