ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

FIRST, I AM grateful to Linda Hutcheon, whose encouragement and support have made this book possible. From our earliest conversations on the subject, she propelled me forward, inspiring and provoking my research with her astute insights. I was fortunate to have a number of talented readers comment on earlier versions of the manuscript. In particular, Naomi Morgenstern, Magdalene Redekop, and Catharine Stimpson offered insightful, challenging feedback, which has been enormously helpful. I also wish to acknowledge The Ohio State University Press's anonymous readers whose comments assisted me in my revisions. Thanks to Maggie Diehl, Juliet Williams, and Jennifer Shoffey Forsythe for their careful assembly of words and images. Sandy Crooms at The Ohio State University Press has been a most reassuring guide, ferrying the project through the various stages of publication.

I was fortunate to have expert assistance when it came to the visual aspects of the book. Terry Odette was invaluable for his skill with image capture technology. As well, I am thankful to John Ford for allowing me to use his beautiful, haunting artwork on the book's cover.

For his seemingly inexhaustible encouragement I thank my spouse and constant reader, Robert Hemmings. As patient listener, tireless cheerleader, and sagacious challenger, he helped make both the process and the product feel meaningful and worthwhile. I acknowledge him with deep gratitude and affection.

My family and friends have also contributed to the personal significance of this project. In particular, I want to thank my grandmother, Irene Stevens, whose immense kindness and generosity continued throughout her struggles with Alzheimer's disease. My efforts at interpreting the devastating effects of this illness are the result of my own attachment to one of its many victims. She is sorely missed. My parents and brothers have, as always, nourished me as I worked with good food, good conversation, and good humor. I thank them all for bolstering my spirits when my enthusiasm lagged.

I wish to acknowledge the journal Canadian Literature, where a portion of chapter 1 appeared as “‘And then—’: Narrative Identity and Uncanny Aging in The Stone Angel,” volume 198, Autumn 2008.
