

PROJECT MUSE®

---

Uncommon Women

Laffrado, Laura

Published by The Ohio State University Press

Laffrado, Laura.

Uncommon Women: Gender and Representation in Nineteenth-Century U.S. Women's Writing.

The Ohio State University Press, 2009.

Project MUSE.muse.jhu.edu/book/27816.

➔ For additional information about this book

<https://muse.jhu.edu/book/27816>

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I AM HAPPY to acknowledge the people and institutions whose help has been so valuable during the writing of this book.

Western Washington University awarded me generous and timely funding in the form of research grants and professional leave. Both Dean Ronald Kleinknecht and Dean Peter Elich provided important support of my work. I am also grateful for the helpful assistance I received from English Department chairs Kathleen Lundeen and Marc Geisler.

Frank Haulgren and his staff at Western Washington University's Wilson Library tirelessly and patiently located long lists of obscure sources for me, particularly during my research on women's Civil War narratives.

I spent many enjoyable days reading the Fanny Fern papers as well as nineteenth-century U.S. literary papers in the Sophia Smith Collection at Smith College.

It has been such a pleasure to work with both Sandy Crooms and Maggie Diehl at The Ohio State University Press. The anonymous readers arranged for by the press provided meticulous commentary at different stages of this project. This book is much better for their insightful and generous readings.

Papers and drafts of articles that have become part of this book have benefited from valuable readings by Jana Argersinger, Beverly Lyon Clark, Sherry Lee Linkon, Jane Schultz, and Kathryn Zabelle Stodola.

Colleagues and staff in the English Department at Western Washington University assisted me in countless ways, especially Linda C. Flanagan, Aline Franklin, Tina Nelson, and Pam Race. I owe special thanks to Allison Giffen, who generously put aside her own work to read my chapter on Sarah Kemble Knight. I am indebted to Bill Lyne and John Purdy for their support as well as for the scholarly model they provide in their own work. Bill Smith supplied steady friendship as well as a companionable presence as we kept workaholic hours in our offices.

Graduate and undergraduate students in my American literature courses brought enthusiasm and ready engagement to these readings. In particular, Gabe Galanda, Brooke Hoffard, Lynda Jensen, Ann Keefer, David Robinson, Hannah Root, Lindsey St. Hilaire, Shurla Thibou, and Jessica Van Horn raised the intellectual temperature of our classrooms.

My dear friend Sara Balogh has long been an example of intelligence and joie de vivre to me. Debbi Hansen's friendship has given me such pleasure during the years I have worked on this book. Doug Iannelli has repeatedly been a friend in my times of need. Erik Papritz's kindness and encouragement meant a great deal to me during the last stages of this project. And Sharlane Shaffer provided a model of feminist courage and grace that continues to inspire me.

I am most deeply indebted to my family. My sister has unstintingly given me encouragement and assistance well above and beyond the call of duty. I am humbly and eternally grateful to her. My brothers have been loyal and loving supporters of my choices. Their children, Jenny, Julie, Anthony, and Andrew, grew along with this book. It gives me great pleasure to witness their ever-increasing literacies. My parents have always taken pride in my scholarly work. Though my father did not live to see this book completed, up until his death he made weekly inquiries regarding its progress. My mother, among her innumerable selfless acts, allowed me to instruct her in nineteenth-century U.S. women's writing. This book is dedicated to her and to the memory of my father.

Several passages in chapter 2 appeared in an essay in In Her Own Voice: Nineteenth-Century American Women Essayists, ed. Sherry Lee Linkon (New York: Garland, 1997). An earlier version of chapter 3 appeared in ESQ 48, nos. 1 and 2 (2002), copyright 2003 by the Board of Regents of Washington State University. An earlier version of chapter 4 appeared in Over Here: A European Journal of American Culture 17, no. 2 (1997).