My deep appreciation goes to my fellow researchers, who wrote the country studies constituting the core of this book. It has been a great privilege and pleasure to see this collaborative work developing under the capable hands of Maurits Berger, Léon Buskens, Albert Dekker, Esther van Eijk, Andrew Harding, Mustafa Koçak, Olaf Köndgen, Martin Lau, Ziba Mir-Hosseini, Philip Ostien, Mohammad Hamid Saboory, Dorothea Schulz, Nadia Sonneveld, and Nadjma Yassari.

I am greatly indebted to Jan Schoonenboom and Wendy Asbeek Brusse, who initiated and assigned the project on behalf of the Scientific Council for State Policy (WRR). Without their unwavering support and critical counseling, this project could not have been completed. The intense and stimulating discussions with Maurits Berger, Albert Dekker and Maarten Barends in the initial phase, still fill me with sweet memories.

I am also grateful to Baudouin Dupret and Rudolph Peters, who read the whole manuscript as referees, and provided us with advise. Various chapters of the book were presented to a wider audience at conference panels of the International Law and Society Association, in 2008 in Montreal and in 2009 in Denver. I thank my colleagues from SOAS, Andrew Harding (now at Victoria), and Martin Lau, as well as Philip Ostien and Léon Buskens, for co-chairing those sessions.

For years, the Van Vollenhoven Institute for Law, Governance and Development (VVI) has been the home base for a dozen dedicated academics, who carry out challenging socio-legal research and teaching projects all over the world. Combining the ambitious project of this book with other VVI tasks, notably that of being the institute's director, was challenging in the least. This situation did not only cause considerable delays of the project, but also put quite some stress on my colleagues at the institute. I offer both my apologies and my gratitude to my colleagues, both inside and outside the VVI, who tolerated and supported me, took over the watch, and contributed to the project in many ways. Albert Dekker, my longtime colleague at the VVI, has been a model of generosity and efficacy in an amazing number of capacities, such as librarian, researcher, author, and coordinator. I owe more than thanks to him. For valuable comments and discussions I am grateful to Theo Veenkamp as well as to Adriaan Bedner; thanks to their help and especially to the all-out efforts of Jan van Olden, Ab Massier, and Kari van Weeren, we can finally see this book completed and the VVI still alive and kicking.

I would like to thank Julie Chadbourne for her editorial assistance with regards to the country chapters in this book. Her dedication and meticulous efforts have been crucial for bringing this project close to the finish line. Stijn van Huis also contributed substantively by his careful reading of and commenting on all country chapters, and by composing the glossary, with Julie's help. Nadia Sonneveld helped with the editing of several chapters. At the VVI Marianne Moria, Kora Bentvelsen, Sylvia Holverda, Dennis Janssen, Sandra Moniaga, Tristram Moeliono, Benjamin van Rooij, Myrna Safitri, Ahmed Tawfik, and Janine Ubink were of help for one aspect of the book or another. Hannah Mason edited the introductory and concluding parts of this book, and helped to make all other sections camera ready; she also proofread the manuscript. With her linguistic and organisational skills, she made the completion of this project in its final months both a reality and a pleasure.

To the Faculty of Law, especially to its Dean Carel Stolker, I express my sincere gratitude for creating a supportive environment for our research, similarly to the headquarters of Leiden University. LUCIS, the new Leiden University Center for the Study of Islam and Society, of which the establishment, early 2009, was necessitated by the unfortunate demise of the inter-university ISIM institute, supports many research projects in this field. LUCIS also provided funding for the conference in June 2010, where the authors of this book convened, for the first time, to discuss recent developments in the countries of study, and to launch this publication.

In various stages of this project translations of country studies were made, first from English to Dutch and finally from Dutch to English. I am grateful to Anne Saab, Will Saab, and Kate Delaney for their translation work, and to the Netherlands Organisation for Scientific Research (NWO) for its generous support of the translation. Revisions, updates and other changes made by authors and editor are however considerable, and final responsibility for the text rests with them only.

I record my gratitude to my warmly supportive publisher, Yvonne Twisk of the reborn Leiden University Press as well as to Chantal Nicolaes, Erik van Aert and Saskia de Vries of Amsterdam University Press for their admirable patience and wonderful assistance throughout this project.

Of my dear parents, Will and Ank Otto, my father has not lived to see the completion of this book, but his spirit and my mother's never-ending support have always been there. In a most literal sense, my wife Marileen and our children, Miriam, Benjamin and Saskia, have joined, supported and taught me more than I could ever expect.
