ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

My first thanks are to John Russon, my teacher and friend, for encouraging and directing my personal and philosophical growth. I would not be where I am today were it not for him and the world he introduced me to. I also owe a great debt of thanks to Marina McCoy, who supervised the first version of this project and helped me shape it, and whose support and generosity has been unflagging. Some of the seeds for this project were sown in the context of Bill Wians's Aristotle seminars at Boston College, and I am grateful for the guidance of such an insightful teacher and reader of Aristotle. Thanks also to Bill and to Arthur Madigan for their feedback on this project in its earlier forms, and to Drew Hyland for his generous feedback on the manuscript. I owe thanks to Mitchell Miller, who illuminated Plato, and philosophy in general, for me. I would like to thank my many other teachers at Boston College, St. John's College, the University of Guelph, and elsewhere for sharing their wisdom, time, and insight. Thank you to my philosophical friends, from whom I've learned so much, including Sharon Cohen, Deirdre Rubin, Whitney Howell, Greg Kirk, Ömer Aygün, Eli Diamond, Patricia Fagan, David Ciavatta, Kym Maclaren, Greg Recco, Ryan Quintana, the participants in the Toronto Seminar, and many others. Thanks also to my colleagues in the philosophy department at the University of Minnesota, Duluth, who maintain an ideally supportive philosophical and work environment, and to Paula Derdiger and Kelly MacPhail for their tireless support and friendship. Most especially, to Eric Sanday, whose wisdom and courage sustains me.

I am grateful also for the hard work of the editors and staff at Northwestern University Press: Nathan MacBrien, Henry Carrigan, Marianne Jankowski, and Trevor Perri; and for that of Steven Moore for compiling the index.
