Chapter 4

Here is told, is recounted, the greatness of the rulership of the nobles who guarded Azcapotzalco, which was the chief city, the first among all the Acolhua and Tepaneca, when the great Tezozomoclti was made ruler in it. Because he slew Ixtlilxochitl, their noble sovereign, he fully ruled all the people as the supreme ruler.³³⁷ And it is told how this great city was established.

In this book of stories it is told about the Azcapotzalco people, who first undertook to establish their city in the first era. They were a very great multitude. Certainly the density of this one was nowhere equaled. Its settlement lasted five hundred and thirty years.³³⁹ Thus they set an example with their cities. The first who came to rule was one Hueyztzin Teuctli,³⁴¹ the second was Acolhuaca Teuctli, the son-in-law³⁴² of the lord Xolotl. And it is said that he held the rulership peacefully in goodness for one hundred years.

After Acolhua, his son Cuecuc³⁴⁶ took the rulership, but it is not said for how many years he ruled, although he had the rulership for a long time. After he died, he installed one of his sons as their ruler. He was called Cuauhtzinteuctli, grandson of the ruler Acolhua. And so he made himself the ruler. And this ruler's accomplishments were not written, because the books about his rulership perished.³⁴⁸ Then he was succeeded by Ilhuicamina. After he died, Matlaccoatl followed behind him and was made ruler. After this ruler died, a son called Tezcacoatl³⁵⁰ received the rulership. After this Tezcacoatl died, one named Tezcapoctli ruled. After this Tezcapoctli died, the lord Teotlehuac followed him. But the accomplishments of all these lords are not found in the painted books.³⁵² (When the Spaniards entered, they destroyed all these books.³⁵³) And after this ruler Teotlehuac died, came the rulership of Tzihuac Tlatonac, who ruled the nobility for sixty years.

In the life of this lord-ruler, the Mexica [arrived in this land of] grassy lakes among the reeds.³⁵⁸ [The] people. After this lord died, one of his sons received the nobility, and he began to rule just one year after his father died. And he was called Tezozomocltli, who was great when he was ruler.³⁶⁰ His mother's name was Cihuaxochitl. Four years later he took this office.³⁶¹ And afterwards, his son was installed as ruler.³⁶³ So they summoned the assembly of all his vassals when his father died. And it is not said why his mother did not make him ruler until he was known thus already for four years. The revered noble ruled and was more prosperous than all of the lords. He had very many possessions, so that he continued to grow with honor. And it was said that he held the rulership for eighty years. In his reign the lord in Texcallan,³⁶⁶ Ce Acaxitl Yztac, sent him much honor because of his lord-rulership.³⁶⁷ They received Culhuacateuctli Cuanexcaye³⁶⁸ into the midst of Tetzcohcō. He was the ruler of the Tlaxcalteca land. Very happily, their envoys were admitted readily and looked after very well and calmly.
