

PROJECT MUSE®

Musicians in Transit

Karush, Matthew B.

Published by Duke University Press

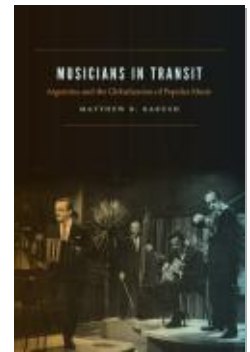

Karush, Matthew B.

Musicians in Transit: Argentina and the Globalization of Popular Music.

Duke University Press, 2016.

Project MUSE., <a href="

<https://muse.jhu.edu/>.

➔ For additional information about this book

<https://muse.jhu.edu/book/64063>

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This book was immeasurably improved by the many friends and colleagues who read chapter drafts, discussed theoretical issues, made crucial suggestions, wrote letters of support, and in a few cases, shared source material. I am particularly grateful to Ezequiel Adamovsky, Jeremy Adelman, Paulina Alberto, Paula Alonso, Jason Borge, Alejandra Bronfman, Lila Caimari, Illa Carrillo Rodríguez, Oscar Chamosa, Chris Ehrick, Eduardo Elena, Sandra Gayol, Danny James, Deborah Kaplan, Valeria Manzano, Andrea Matallana, Michael O'Malley, Fabiola Orquera, Silvana Palermo, Pablo Palomino, Fernando Ríos, Karin Roseblatt, Jessica Stites Mor, John Tutino, Barbara Weinstein, and Eric Zolov. Kip Hanrahan and Gustavo Santaolalla both agreed to let me interview them, and their memories and insights proved enormously helpful. At Duke University Press, Gisela Fosado, Lydia Rose Rappaport-Hankins, and Sara Leone were as efficient and supportive as any author could want. In Mark Healey and Bryan McCann, Gisela found two terrific readers; they provided generous, insightful, and illuminating critiques.

I am grateful as well for the support of several institutions. A fellowship from the National Endowment for the Humanities freed me from my teaching obligations for a year, while the History and Art History Department and the Provost's Office at George Mason University funded several research trips to Argentina. The chapter on Oscar Alemán appeared previously in Eduardo Elena and Paulina Alberto, eds., Rethinking Race in Modern Argentina (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2016). Likewise, the material on Gato Barbieri in chapter 2 appeared in the Journal of Latin American Cultural Studies. I am grateful for permission to republish.

In different ways, my children, Eli and Leah, are both music lovers. Their enthusiasm for talking about and listening to music—even the strange, old music I make them listen to—is contagious and helped make working on this book the most fun I have had as an historian. Their mother, my best friend, partner, and colleague Alison Landsberg, has had a more direct impact on the book. With the exception of these lines, she has read every word of the text, most of them more than once. I can only hope that some of her creativity and analytical brilliance has made its way into the final product.