

PROJECT MUSE®

Tomorrow's Living Room

Jason Whitmarsh

Published by Utah State University Press

Whitmarsh, Jason.

Tomorrow's Living Room.

Utah State University Press, 2009.

Project MUSE.muse.jhu.edu/book/9423.

➔ For additional information about this book

<https://muse.jhu.edu/book/9423>

Access provided at 29 Mar 2020 16:40 GMT with no institutional affiliation

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 International License.

ONE ART

At ten, I wanted to be a kung fu master
like Bruce Lee, bare-chested, sideways, intent
on hitting my way out of disaster.

In the unmade and unimagined fluster
of being young, I hadn't yet spent much time on how to be a kung fu master,

except to watch Lee get meaner, get faster.
He seemed genuinely pissed off, like he meant to kill every actor, cause real disaster.

They attacked one by one (why?), and the last, or next-to-last had knives and guns that went nowhere. "You want some?" (Me, as kung fu master.)

That childhood is now both remote and vaster,
and Lee is a death and a continent away. He'd already had his disaster

by the time I was watching every gesture—
his kicks, a flip, a scream. It's evident
why I wanted to be a kung fu master,
as though desire alone could prevent disaster.