WINNOWING

Between alike fingertips a match springs its will into contour and relief: whatnots of hill and sage,
the desert night sliding coolly into the noisy shades of an open coat sleeve—the languorous coming-to of rust and starlight on emotionless train cars tugging green and again green names into darkness.

Still, into the low carved system of systems the world dissolves—minerals scraping skin and leaf till ghosts of every bone tilt in some remote heaven.

Still, ordinary sands shift under wind, thunder rustles its latent wraiths, the sky a zero shrinking in.
