

PROJECT MUSE®

Anatomizing Civil War

Martin Dinter

Published by University of Michigan Press

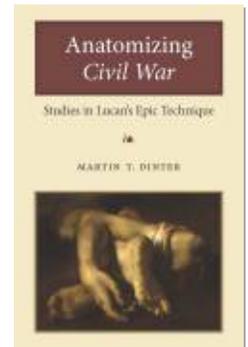

Dinter, Martin.

Anatomizing Civil War: Studies in Lucan's Epic Technique.

University of Michigan Press, 2013.

Project MUSE., <a href="

<https://muse.jhu.edu/>.

➔ For additional information about this book

<https://muse.jhu.edu/book/21923>

Access provided at 31 Mar 2020 07:44 GMT with no institutional affiliation

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 International License.

Acknowledgments

With great pleasure I thank the following institutions for their kind and generous support in the course of my research: DAAD, Cusanuswerk—bischöfliche Studienförderung e.V., University of Heidelberg-Cambridge Programme, AHRC, St. John's College Benefactor Scholarships, The Cambridge European Trust, The Jebb Fund, The Kurt Hahn Trust, The Fondation Hardt.

The support of the Cambridge Classics Faculty allowed me to attend many a conference. I have presented parts of my Lucan project at research seminars and conferences at the universities of Basel, Bordeaux, Cambridge, Liverpool, Oxford, Rostock, Virginia, Warwick, and Würzburg and have at these occasions greatly benefited from the comments made by Matthew Leigh, Chris Kraus, Shadi Bartsch, Sylvie Franchet d'Espérey, Christine Walde, Bruce Gibson, Tony Woodman, and Thomas Baier. I also wish to thank Glenn W. Most and Christiane Reitz for their inspirational teaching at Heidelberg, as well as Philip Hardie and John Henderson at Cambridge. The latter has directed my PhD thesis, from which this book stems, toward its completion during three years with much patience, diligence, and encouragement and has been the ideal Doktorvater. My thanks to him. I also extend my thanks to Emily Gowers and Stephen Harrison, who have acted as my PhD examiners.

Elaine Fantham has given me access to forthcoming material and kindly read my entire manuscript, and her wise comments have often spurred more than she could ever have imagined, while Michael Reeve's and the late John A. Crook's astute criticism has saved me from many an error. John A. Crook has also kindly provided translations of the Epitaphium Lucani and the Argumenta Lucani. Philip Hardie has offered generous comments and has made available excerpts from his forthcoming book on Fama,¹ and Susanna Morton Braund has ever so kindly given me permission to use her translation of Lucan—it has stood as model throughout. De Gruyter has kindly given me permission to reuse material from my chapters “Lucan’s Epic Body,” in Lucan im 21. Jahrhundert, edited by Ch. Walde (Munich: K. G. Saur, 2005), 295–312, and “. . . und es bewegt sich doch—der Automatismus des abgehackten Gliedes in Lukan” in Lucan between Epic Tradition and Aesthetic Innovation, edited by Ch. Reitz and N. Hömke (Berlin: De Gruyter, 2010), 175–190. I am also grateful to the Musée Fabre de Montpellier, for granting me the right to reproduce Gericault’s painting on the jacket of this book. Particular thanks go to Charles Guerin for his patient and repeated help and cultural diplomacy in this matter.

I am most indebted to the librarians at the Cambridge Classical Library, Stephen Howe and Lyn Bailey, for their splendid cooperation and support. In addition I have received further bibliographical help with hunting down rare continental items from Andreas Bartholomä, Antonia Ruppel, and especially Cornelia Vetter. Inge and Abed Sai have been the most generous of all hosts during my time in Britain, and so has Jesus Agustin Badillo-Corona in Mexico. My parents, who have continually offered their love and support, end this list. I dedicate this work to my mother and the memory of my father, who left us when I had only just finished this project.

Martin T. Dinter

1. Cf. Hardie 2012. Asso 2011 appeared after the manuscript had been completed.