

INTERNATIONAL EDITORIAL BOARD

NATHALIE F. ANDERSON, Swarthmore
College

HOUSTON A. BAKER, JR., Vanderbilt
University

MARY ANN CAWS, Graduate Center,
City University of New York

HOWARD CAYGILL, Kingston University

JOE CLEARY, Yale University

MICHAEL CORNETT, Duke University

MARTHA J. CUTTER, University of Connecticut

TERENCE E. DIGGORY, Skidmore
College

TERRY EAGLETON, Lancaster University

JAMES ENGELL, Harvard University

STEPHEN GREENBLATT, Harvard
University

PATRICK COLM HOGAN, University of Connecticut

DAVID JOHNSON, Open University

KAREN L. KILCUP, University of North
Carolina Greensboro

FRANÇOISE LIONNET, University of California, Los Angeles

ANIA LOOMBA, University of Pennsylvania

GRAHAM MACPHEE, West Chester
University

JOHN MARX, University of California,
Davis

DONALD MORTON, Syracuse University

CARY NELSON, University of Illinois

PETER NICHOLLS, New York University

STEPHEN REGAN, Durham University

PAUL SMITH, George Mason University

TERESA S. SOUFAS, Temple University

HORTENSE J. SPILLERS, Vanderbilt
University

GAYATRI CHAKRAVORTY SPIVAK,
Columbia University

EDITORIAL POLICY

College Literature: A Journal of Critical Literary Studies is dedicated to publishing original and innovative scholarly research across the various periods, intellectual fields, and geographical locations that comprise the changing discipline of Anglophone and comparative literary studies. The journal is committed to the renewal of critique as a historically determinate, self-reflexive, and socially substantive practice, which in resisting “empathy with the victor” (Benjamin) remains perpetually dissatisfied with each new consensus. We are convinced that literature remains a significant locus for such a renewal, since in seeking to establish a space “outside” normative social values, literary (and other) texts continually stage and restage the discursive, disciplinary, and institutional limits that enable such norms, and so work to reveal critique’s complicity with them. In interrogating critical practice, the journal aims to investigate its involvement in broader parameters of public debate organized by such enduring (though mutating) political demarcations as those between the private and the public, the national and the global, or indeed between the cultural and the political itself.

College Literature welcomes submissions from across the range of scholarship in literary studies. It invites studies that explore how changing structures of social experience (such as the transnational reach of culture, or the transgressive power of sexuality, or the excessive potential of the past over contemporary interpretation) call on us to rethink existing critical assumptions, conceptual terms, and historical frameworks. Alongside work that reconsiders “traditional” or “conventional” critical orthodoxies, College Literature also welcomes scholarship that questions the “new orthodoxies” that developed as radical critiques of those existing positions but that are also embedded within specific intellectual trajectories and historical configurations of experience.