Katie Bryant
Dr. Katie Bryant has spent more than 15 years working in the field of writing studies, coordinating writing centres in both Canada and South Africa, and helping academics and university students on both the African and North American continent develop their abilities to learn and write for their various disciplines of study. She is currently a visiting scholar at Mangosuthu University of Technology (MUT), located in uMlazi, South Africa, a township outside of Durban. In this capacity, she is helping the institution open its first writing centre, as well as designing and implementing an evidence-informed capacity building programme to help new scholars develop their abilities to write for research purposes. She obtained a PhD in Education from McGill’s Department of Integrated Studies in Education and is an Adjunct Research Professor in Carleton University’s School of Linguistics and Applied Language Studies. Her research interrogates rhetorical reasons for the limited visibility of African research in international fora. She seeks to use findings from these investigations to build empirically informed writing support mechanisms to help African scholars, universities, and international funding institutions address these visibility issues.

Submission Guidelines

Visit the AAP Perspectives homepage at https://msupress.org/journals/alliance-for-african-partnership-perspectives/ to see the latest call for thought pieces and submission guidelines.

Authors will be directed to the online submission system.

Submitted papers should be formatted and written according to APA Style. See https://apastyle.apa.org/style-grammar-guidelines for detailed style and formatting guidelines.

General Layout Guidelines

• Title page: Give title, author names, and author affiliations.
• Abstract: Each article must begin with an abstract, a 150-word summary of the essential points and findings of the paper.
• Keywords: Provide 5 or so keywords to help readers find your paper more easily online.
• Biography: For each author, provide a three- to four-line biographical sketch that describes their discipline, current affiliation, and major research interests and works.
• Text: References (including references to personal communications) are placed in the body of the text. Following each quotation (even an indented [blocked] one) or statement specific enough to need a reference, the citation is placed in parentheses, with the author’s name, followed by the year of publication of the work quoted or referred to, and the page or pages cited, thus: (Doe 1972, 145–157). If the author of the quotation is clear from the text, then the sentence concluding the reference should cite the year of publication and the page(s).
• Tables and Figures: Embed tables and figures within the text after they are first mentioned (or “called out”), place them at either the top or the bottom of the page, and insert a blank double-spaced line to separate the table or figure from the adjacent text. Tables should be accompanied by a short descriptive title centered at the top of the table and, if applicable, a caption beneath. Images should be labeled by number (Figure 1, Figure 2, etc.) and include a caption. Include source citation(s) and/or permission statements in table and figure captions as needed. (If a citation is included in an image or table caption, make sure it is listed in the reference section.)
• Acknowledgments: Any acknowledgements should appear before the reference section.
• References: All references should appear under a reference heading and be formatted according to APA Style. Please see the “Reference” header below for links to reference guidelines

References

References should follow the APA style guide.
