The Indiana Magazine of History documents and investigates the changing culture of Indiana and the Midwest. The editors welcome critical writing that highlights the history of the state and its surrounding region, that adds historical perspective to contemporary issues, or that deepens public understanding of historical problems. Submissions should be presented in digital form, in Word or a compatible format. Articles are peer reviewed prior to publication. Unsolicited book reviews are not accepted. For further information on the journal's editorial policies, visit our website at www.indiana.edu/~imaghist.
