

GROUP

The Journal of the Eastern Group Psychotherapy Society

The purpose of GROUP is to offer the wide range of practitioners, researchers, and theoreticians who comprise the professional group psychotherapy community an international interdisciplinary forum for the exchange of information. The journal publishes a wide spectrum of original, high-quality articles addressing both small and large group processes from a variety of vantage points and disciplines. Recently we have expanded our conception of small group process to include work with couples and other dyads. Papers are welcome from such fields as psychology, psychiatry, group dynamics, psychohistory, psychobiology, anthropology, sociology, and other related areas of endeavor. Articles are peer-reviewed and include clinical, theoretical, research, and historical papers, as well as those bearing on practical issues of group therapy practice management. The journal also includes editorials, discussions of submitted papers, readers' responses to papers published in the journal, book reviews, and film reviews relating to the journal's domain of interest.
