Contributors

Doron S. Ben-Atar is professor of history at Fordham University. He is the co-editor, together with Andrew Pessin, of Anti-Zionism on Campus: The University, Free Speech, and BDS (Indiana University Press, 2018).

David A. Gerber is University at Buffalo distinguished professor of history and senior fellow in history and in disability studies at the University at Buffalo. Recently he has published a second, updated and revised edition of American Immigration: A Very Short Introduction (Oxford University Press, 2021), and, with Bruce Dierenfield, Disability Rights and Religious Liberty in Education: The Story Behind Zobrest v. Catalina Foothills School District (University of Illinois Press, 2020).

John P. Jackson, Jr. is a professor in the James Madison College of Public Affairs at Michigan State University. He specializes in the history, philosophy, and rhetoric of the scientific study of race. His work has appeared in Isis, Philosophy of Science, Rhetoric Society Quarterly, and other journals. He is the author or editor of six books, the most recent of which is Darwinism, Democracy and Race (Routledge, 2017) co-written with David Depew.

Robert David Johnson is professor of history at Brooklyn College and the CUNY Graduate Center; he previously served as distinguished professor in the humanities at Tel Aviv University. He specializes in the history of the US Congress.

Jonathan Judaken is the Spence L. Wilson Chair in the Humanities at Rhodes College. He has published more than sixty academic articles on the history of existentialism, antisemitism, racism, and post-Holocaust French Jewish thought. He has written, edited, or co-edited six books, most recently The Albert Memmi Reader (University of Nebraska Press, 2020). He is currently completing a monograph entitled, Critical Theories of Anti-Semitism: Confronting Modernity and Modern Judeophobia.

Rachel Kranson is an associate professor of religious studies at the University of Pittsburgh. She is the author of Ambivalent Embrace: Jewish Upward Mobility in Postwar America (University of North Carolina Press, 2017) and the co-editor of A Jewish Feminine Mystique?: Jewish Women in Postwar America (Rutgers University Press, 2010).

Geoffrey P. Levin is an assistant professor of Middle Eastern and Jewish studies at Emory University. His work has appeared in Israel Studies Review, Arab Studies Journal, Shofar, and Israel Affairs. He is currently working on a book that explores the issue of Palestinian rights in the early American Jewish relationship with Israel.

Pamela S. Nadell is professor of Jewish studies and history and holds that Patrick Clendenen Chair in Women’s and Gender History at American University, where she directs the Jewish Studies Program. Her most recent book, America's Jewish Women: A History from Colonial Times to Today (W.W. Norton, 2019), won the National Jewish Book Award for Jewish Book of the Year.

Riv-Ellen Prell is professor emerita of American studies at the University of Minnesota. She is the author of among others, Fighting to Become Americans: Jews, Gender, and the Anxiety of Assimilation (Beacon Press, 1999) and Prayer and Community: The Havurah in American Judaism (Wayne State University Press, 1989), and Interpreting Women's Lives: Personal Narratives and Feminist Theory (Indiana University Press, 1989). She is the curator of both the physical exhibit and website “A Campus Divided: Progressives, Racism, and Antisemitism at the University of Minnesota 1930-1942,” acampusdivided.umn.edu.

Shari Rabin is assistant professor of Jewish studies and religion at Oberlin College. She is the author of Jews on the Frontier: Religion and Mobility in Nineteenth-century America (New York University Press, 2017), which won the National Jewish Book Award in American Jewish Studies and was a finalist for the Sami Rohr Prize for Jewish Literature. She is currently writing a history of Jews, religion, and race in the US South, from the seventeenth-century to the present day.

Kenneth S. Stern is the director of the Bard Center for the Study of Hate and an attorney and award-winning author. For twenty-five years, he was the American Jewish Committee’s expert on antisemitism, and he was also the lead drafter of the “Working Definition of Antisemitism.” He has argued before the Supreme Court of the United States and testified before Congress, and his work has appeared in The New York Times, The Washington Post, USA Today, The Guardian, and The Forward. His newest book is The Conflict Over the Conflict: The Israel/Palestine Campus Debate (New Jewish Press, 2020).

Britt P. Tevis is a historian whose research lies at the intersection of American Jewish and legal history. She has published articles in the Journal of American History, the American Journal of Legal History, and American Jewish History.

Andrew S. Winston is a professor emeritus of psychology at the University of Guelph in Canada, where he taught history of psychology. His publications have focused on scientific racism, the history of antisemitism in psychology, and the collaboration of psychologists with far-right, racist, and antisemitic movements.

Reviews

Amy Kerner is assistant professor of history at the University of Texas at Dallas. She is writing a book on Yiddish in twentieth-century Argentina.

Jessica Lang is professor of English and the founding Newman Director of the Wasserman Jewish Studies Center at Baruch College, CUNY. Her most recent publication, a co-edited volume, is entitled Off the Derech: Leaving Orthodox Judaism (SUNY Press, 2020).

Laura Arnold Liebman is professor of English and humanities at Reed College. Her book Messianism, Secrecy, and Mysticism: A New Interpretation of Early Yehudah Mirsky is professor of near eastern and Judaic studies at Brandeis University, is the author of Rav Kook: Mystic in a Time of Revolution (Yale University Press, 2019). He previously served in the US State Department’s human rights bureau.

Schneur Zalman Newfield is assistant professor of sociology at Borough of Manhattan Community College, CUNY. His is the author of Degrees of Separation: Identity Formation While Leaving Ultra-Orthodox Judaism (Temple University Press, 2020).

Roberta G. Sands is professor emerita at the University of Pennsylvania School of Social Policy and Practice. Besides her book, The Spiritual Transformation of Jews who Become Orthodox (SUNY Press, 2020), she has authored three editions of a textbook on clinical social work practice in mental health and numerous articles on family, religious change, and cultural competence.

Jonathan Schorsch serves as professor of Jewish religious and intellectual history at Universität Potsdam. He recently co-edited The Sephardic Atlantic: Colonial Histories and Postcolonial Perspectives (Palgrave MacMillan, 2020).

Public History Reviews

Hannah Kosstrin is associate professor in the department of dance and affiliate faculty in the Melton Center for Jewish Studies and the Center for Slavic and East European Studies at The Ohio State University. Her book Honest Bodies: Revolutionary Modernism in the Dances of Anna Sokolow (Oxford University Press, 2017) was awarded Finalist for the Jordan Schnitzer Book Award.