The Mind of a Poet

Havens, Raymond Dexter

Published by Johns Hopkins University Press

For additional information about this book https://muse.jhu.edu/book/71677

For content related to this chapter https://muse.jhu.edu/related_content?type=book&id=2451109
INDEX

W. = William Wordsworth. P. = The Prelude. Figures in boldface indicate the more important discussions of a subject; figures in italics refer to lines of the poem under which they are listed.

Abyss, the mind’s, 142, 168, 424, 428, 489, 612
Action, vigorous, admired by W., 407, 433; W. indifferent to the joys of, 587, 591
Active, creative powers of the mind valued by W., 138, 316-17, 321-4, 331, 342, 345, 380, 403, 573, 581, 599; denied in 17th and 18th centuries, 204-5, 322; imagination is active, 207
Addison, J., 321
"Admiration" = wonder, 481-2
Aeneid, 542
Akenside, M., 87, 112, 204
Alfoxden, W.’s happiness at, 591, 636; the Solitary’s life in Devon may be reminiscent of, 636; dates of W.’s stay at, 636; Alfoxton the correct spelling, 636
Alps, the, W.’s description of crossing, 425-8; mystic experience occasioned by writing this description, 427-8
Analysis, decried by W., 130, 137-8, 316, 317-18, 335, 380; see Reason
Animad, 74, 190-8, 301, 382, 462, 568
Animism, 68-87, 294, 329, 391, 454-5, 459, 484, 488, 501, 612; a source of W.’s peculiar power, 2; connected with fear, 48, 81-2; Hudson, Whitman, and Pater on, 68; metaphors that sound like, 69-70; W.’s frequent mention of “Powers,” 70, 73-6, 294, 384-5, 460, 567, 600, 617-18; the pathetic fallacy similar to, 71; vividness of W.’s sensory images, 71-2; W.’s tendency to personify objects and forces, 72-5, 474, 598; this tendency has affinities with pantheism and belief in the anima mundi, 74, 192, 568; W.’s peculiar use of “presence,” 74-5; defined, 76, 82, 83; survivals of in civilized man, 76, 81; little in the poetry printed by W., 77-8; origin of W.’s, 78-9, 82-4; W.’s reticence concerning, 79; W.’s doubts concerning, 79-80; W. favored even when resting on falsehood, 80-1; stimulated by imagination, 81, 256; connected with mystery, 81; with W.’s consciousness of one life in all things, 82-4; influence of on W.’s conception of nature, 112-13; an illustration of W.’s anti-rationalism, 135-6; influenced W.’s religion, 182, 194; personification passes into, 567; belief that nature shares our emotions, 567-8
Anti-intellectualism, 394, 411, 586, 593; of D. H. Lawrence, Pope, Swift, Keats, 126-7; attacked by I. Babbitt, Dean Inge, I. A. Richards, 126; different kinds of, 127; as an attack on man’s pride, 127, 151; pro-intellectualism of W., 127-8, 149-50; romanticism a learned movement, 149; of Goethe, Rousseau, 151; see also Anti-rationalism, Reason Anti-rationalism, 90, 126-54, 317-18, 333, 391, 394, 462; a source of W.’s strength, 2; W. inclined to be hostile to science, 21, 128, 147, 158, 318-19, 380, 404; W. distrusted bookishness, 128-9; W. favored the harmonious development of all our powers, 129; W.’s youth not marked by intellectual interests, 129; exclusive devotion to the intellect brought W. to despair, 129; W. rescued from despair by love and nature, 129; this experience, the chief crisis of W.’s life, led to strong anti-rationalism, 129-30; defined, 130; all the faculties needed for right living and right thinking, 130, 150; analytical reason emphasizes differences between men and leads to neglect of emotion, 130-1; W.'s presentation of one-sided, 132, 150; evils of excessive devotion to reason corrected by nature, love, and intercourse with the lowly, 132-3; these correctives inter-dependent, 133; difficulties solved by living, not by thinking, 133; reason varies with the reasoner, 134, 551, 559; reason influenced by joy, 134; reason corrected by the instincts, 134-5; animism an aspect of, 135-6; wise passiveness and intuition, 136-7; critical analysis opposed, 137; W.'s glorification of childhood, 137; creative powers dulled by analysis, 138; analysis gives no sense of the whole, 138; the higher reason distinguished from the lower, 138-40 (see also Vernunft and Verstand); the heart as the organ of insight, 140, 152; mysticism leads to, 140-1, 176, 178; sense of the mystery of life leads to, 141-6, 152-3; W.'s poetry pervaded by, 146-9; no isolated faculty can give wisdom, 150; connected with imagination, 256; with associationism, 315; with intuition, 386; led W. to belittle value of books, 386; and to trust instinct, 405; transcendental basis of, 483; emotional uniformitarianism an aspect of, 594; see also Anti-intellectualism, Reason

Anthony Adverse, 428

Apathy, W.'s dread of, 49-51; prevented by fear, 50-1, 482, 621; superstition preferable to, 80-1, 87, 147; prevents us from seeing the universe as alive, permeated by the Divine, 621; prevented by love, 621 Arabian Nights Entertainments, 398, 404, 440, 483; praised by Coleridge, 389; by Godwin, 390; influence on W., 397

Aristotle, poetry more universal than history, 566

Arnold, M., on nature, 113; on culture, 128-9; on Goethe, 261; on W., 302, 480, 491; on the Grande Chartreuse, 423; "Vaudracour and Julia" W.'s only unreadable poem, 506

Arts, the, W.'s attitude towards, 496-7

Augustine, Saint, quoted, 2

Babbitt, I., 54, 126; thinks man insatiable, 10, 263; denounces the infinite of expansion, 10; on willing vs. knowing, 152; attacks wonder, 153, 487, 492; on imagination, 263

Bacon, F., 1; W. echoes, 407; on poetry and reason, 475; on poetry and history, 583

Bad weather, praised by W., 46, 61, 460; memorable events in W.'s life took place in, 100-1, 303-4, 314, 358, 447, 615

Baedeker, K., Switzerland, 428

Baldwin, S., Earl of Bewdley, 126

Ballman, Adele, xviii, 451

Barstow, Marjorie, 467

Bartholomew Fair, 447; W.'s visit to, 447, 451; contrasted with country fair, 454

Batho, Edith, why W. attended church rarely, 124; on W.'s attitude to science, 151, 404; on W.'s religion, 201; W. influenced by W. R. Hamilton, 411; W. satirizes Pitt, 445; on W.'s relations with Annette, 508; on W.'s tolerance, 538, 558

Beach, J. W., W.'s theorizing about nature derived from earlier English writers, 104, 190-1, 202; W. terms the organ of insight the heart, 140, 152; W. believed in the anima mundi, 190; W.'s Immortality Ode a recantation of his doctrine of nature, 321; on W.'s reading, 351; on P., vi. 294-305, 417

Beatty, A., on W., 336; stresses the three stages, 463; on the "spots of time," 578

Beaupuy, M. A., 500, 503-4; left Blois July 27, 1792, 1792, 494, 516; influenced W., 501, 502, 504; believed in the virtue of the people and in popular emotion, 503; had excessive confidence in constitutional reforms, 505; discussed these with W., 535
Benevolence, vogue of, 123
Binnenleben, W. James on, 3, 6
Birrell, A., on W., 407
Bishop, D. H., 291, 309, 438
Blake, W., 69, 72; reality deadened his imagination, 22, 88, 248, 617; on fear and hope, 39; on imagination, 203, 241; on W.'s attitude to nature, 336; description of sunrise, 639
Boas, G., 514, 604, 639, 640
Boehme, J., 167, 466
Bond, D. F., 259
Books, 375-405, 407, 410, 440, 484; valued by W. more highly than P. indicates, 128, 351-2, 386; W.'s reading, 202, 351-2; of imagination, W. on the value of, 231; treatment of in P. unsatisfactory, 276; one reason for this, 279-80; W.'s freedom in reading when young, 408; common man belittled in, 594; W. dissatisfied with treatment of in P., 632; see Travel
Boy of Windermere, the, 97-8, 183, 217, 221-2, 391-4
Boyle, R., 191
Bradley, A. C., on W.'s love of the lonely, 64; the road to W.'s mind through, not round, his strangeness, 79; the intimation of the illimitable the soul of W.'s typical poems, 142, 583; W. self-willed, 349; on W.'s love of romance, 440; W.'s first bent was towards the sublime, 588, 626; W.'s love for wandering connected with his feeling of infinity, 592; the W. of Lyrical Ballads developed later under Dorothy's influence, 626
Brewer, E. C., Dictionary, 534
Brontë, E., on the mystic experience, 160
Broughton, L. N., xv, xviii
Browne, Sir T., quoted, 6
Browning, Elizabeth B., her poetry too ideal for W., 21-2
Browning, R., 1; on poetry and the infinite, 263; Watts-Dunton on, 492
Brydges, E., W. borrows from, 464; W. praises, 464
Bucke, R. M., 177
Bundy, M. W., 259
Burke, E., his Inquiry into the Sublime and Beautiful may have influenced W., 47-8, 52-3; on imagination, 204-5; use of "creative," 259; praised by W., 445
Burns, R., W.'s defense of, 154; influence of on W., 276, 603; delighted by sound of wind, 438-9
Byron, Lord, admired the vast, 4-5; criticized by W., 38, 264, 288; praised solitude, 62, 66; on imagination, 204; boasted of his swimming, 272
Calvert, R., 531, 560
Cambridge, University of, in W.'s day, 337-8, 349-50, 352-3; contributed to development of W.'s lofty conception of man, 469
Campbell, O. J., on W., 52, 508, 515
Carlyle, T., on wonder, 486
Carlyon, C., on Coleridge's interest in Spinoza, 82, 87
Chartres cathedral, 5; sculptures of, 245
Chartreuse, the, W.'s visit to, 423-4
Childhood, glorified by W. for its reliance on sensations, feelings, instincts, 137; imagination most active in, 220-1; possesses imagination in its full strength, 220-1, 237-8, 253-4, 263, 345, 625; imagination its "throne," 399-400; glorified by W. because the age of wonder, 483; spiritual power derived from recollections of, 573; the mind's supremacy shown in incidents of, 579; see also Books, Education
Chinard, G., 558
Christ, seldom mentioned in W.'s poetry, 201
Cities, W.'s antipathy to, 120, 302, 303, 436, 448, 451; do not always stultify imagination, 227-9, 248, 446-7, 475; but usually do, 446-8; distract and have too potent a life of their own, 447-8; set forth the unity of man, 476; can be seen as wholes only through imagination, 476; see also London Clarissa Harlowe, read by W., 439
Clark, S., 191
Clocks, Italian, how they struck the hours, 430
Clough, A. H., on W., 122
Coleridge, Judge, walks with W., 407
Coleridge, S. T., mentioned, 6, 167, 279, 324, 417, 424, 488, 556, 557, 569, 635; on W.'s matter-of-factness, 11-12, 15, 16, 24, 26, 258; on W., 28, 58, 92, 95, 180, 186, 322, 550, 558; his "Three Graves" criticized by W., 37; on P., 52, 282-3, 309, 617; influence on W., 78, 88, 129, 236, 310, 351, 423, 425, 458, 502, 553, 591, 628; untouched by animism, 79; on imagery, 86; how nature ministers, 102; his "Ode to Dejection," 122, 438, 624, 628, 640; on the importance of the emotions, 131, 138; criticizes analytical reason, 138; on Vernunft and Verstand, 138-9, 152; the poet activates the whole soul, 151; on imagination, 205-29, 246, 249, 252, 254, 259-62, 626, 638; differences between his and W.'s conception of imagination, 205, 208, 209, 213-15, 219-20, 246, 254, 260; influenced by W., 206, 389-90; on "the latency of all [the senses] in each," 211, 571, 613; his principle of reconciliation of opposites, 213-14, 299, 586, 612, 615; his emphasis on unity, 213-15, 319-20, 335, 595, 628; on W.'s purpose in Lyrical Ballads, 228, 487-8, 592, 639; W.'s concern over, 228, 415, 624; stilted diction in his letters, 311; references to in P., 334, 531, 554, 556, 557; his devotion to nature, 334; attacks analysis, 335; on education, 385, 389-90; praises Seven Champions of Christendom, etc., 389-90; fairy tales habituated his mind to the Vast, 390; his indolence and excesses at college, 417; on the transformation wrought by mists, 457; developed the distinction between imagination and fancy, 465; W. weeps at meeting and parting from, 478; on wonder and the poet, 483; the distinction between imagination and fancy not derived from J. P. F. Richter, 491; W. on his unhappiness, 548; W. acknowledged his indebtedness to, 552, 627; his poem on P., 556; his absence from England detrimental to W.'s poetry, 562, 607, 624, 630, 638; W. agrees with as to nature's ministry, 581; W. stresses his affectionate nature, 627; W. borrows from, 636
Como, Lake, W.'s description of, 429
Conrad, J., 551
Contrast intensifies sense of peace, 422
Cookson, W., and wife and son, antagonized the Wordsworth children, 356, 387
Cooper, L., on W.'s reading, 350, 355
Cottle, J., Malvern Hills, 454
Cowley, A., London book-stalls swarmed with the folios of, 497
Crabbe, G., W. on his poetry, 20-1, 246
Craver, A. L., xviii, 342, 559, 604
Creation, achieved by imagination, 207-11; in higher sense, possible only to poets and artists, 209, 259-60; loose use of in 18th century, 259
Creative, see Active
Creative Sensibility, 323, 330, 331, 468, 615
Cudworth, R., 190-1
Darbishire, Helen, on various passages in P., 296, 300, 301, 313
Darkness as a source of spiritual insight, 162, 403, 424, 429, 483, 600, 612
Davy, H., 335, 391
Degas, E. H. G., 245
Deism, 519-20
Deists, 112, 185; their influence on W., 104
De Quincey, T., 51, 242; indebtedness to W., 53, 472-3; on W., 92, 298, 348, 367, 392-3, 412; on St. John's college, 355; sees a mountain valley through mists, 610
INDEX

De Selincourt, E., xv, 392, 609; edition of P., xi, xiii, xvii; relation of present work to his edition, xiii; knowledge of W., xvii; W. haunted by echo, rainbow, cuckoo, glowworm, 142; why W. used nouns with prefix "under," 145; on date of composition of the books of P., 290, 310, 335, 339, 381, 437, 453, 495, 517, 531, 605; on W.'s interest in Druids, 342; comment on passages in P., 365, 370, 393, 406, 505, 532, 639; latest incident planned for original P., 373, 607; W.'s second long vacation, 415; believes P., vii was originally to have followed P., ix-xi, 435; on de S., pp. 533-9, 481; on the dates of W.'s first trip to Paris, 514; W. loved Mary Hutchinson in 1794, 514; "Vaudracour and Julia" omitted from P. to avoid suspicion, 515; date of W.'s turning against France, 540, 558; debt of P., xiii. 312-49 to Guilt and Sorrow, 600; misleading orthodoxy of P., xiv, 606

De Vere, A., W.'s opinions recorded by, 11, 18, 22, 28, 30, 56, 100, 245, 272, 288, 511, 515

Dewart, M., 428

Dibdin, C., 442

Dicey, A. V., on W.'s sympathy with vigorous, even lawless, action, 407, 433; on W.'s account of the French Revolution, 493, 522-3; on W.'s acceptance of erroneous Revolutionary theories, 503, 505

Dignity, of mind valued by W., 234, 364, 370, 502; the imagination its source, 237; of man not emphasized in W.'s early treatment of the poor, 452; of man, W.'s emphasis on, 590, 592, 597-8, 623

Dingle, H., on W.'s hostility to science, 151, 404; on W.'s tautology, 514

Dix, J., on W.'s sad look, 414

Donne, J., quoted, 126, 480

Don Quixote, 245

Doughty, O., 262, 352, 401

Dovedale, 415

Druids, W.'s interest in, 153, 342, 599-600

Dryden, J., criticized by W., 33; W.'s knowledge of, 402

Duff, W., on genius, 151

Echo, W. fascinated by, 142, 464-5; because of appeal to wonder, 483

Education, W.'s views on, 349, 352, 404-5, 593, 599; P. a study in, 385; W.'s interest in, 385; education of nature, 385-6

Elgin Marbles, not enjoyed much by W., 497

Eliot, T. S., on the connection between a poet's life and his poetry, 508

Emerson, R. W., "Each and All," 26; on imagination, 204; on W., 304, 378; on the function of a college, 338; "I embrace the common," 585; neglected transitions, 589

Emont River, 415

Emotion, see Passion

Empson, W., 367

Emulation as incentive in education disapproved of by W., 312, 335, 404

Encyclopaedia Britannica, on mysticism, 162, 178

Enduring, the, W.'s preference for, 2-3, 58, 104-6, 302-3, 411, 412, 551, 587; the infinite as, 242, 263

Espinosa, A. de, 296, 309

Eternity, see Infinity

Evans, B. I., 26, 585

Evans, R., xviii

Eye, dominion of the, 570-1, 572, 583

Fairy tales, praised by W. and Coleridge, 388-90, 440; feed the sense of wonder, 484

Fancy, 465-7; distinguished from imagination, 249, 465, 491, 601; relation of to ministry of nature omitted from P., 276, 289; distinction between it and imagination developed by Coleridge, 465; not derived from Richter, 491; stimulates interest in nature and in man, 465-7; in W. steadied by grand natural objects, 467; a development of wonder, 484

Fausset, H. l'A., on W., 508
INDEX

Fawcett, J., not mentioned in P., 516; no evidence that he followed Godwin, 558

Fear, the ministry of, 39-53, 64, 299, 305, 344, 369-70, 396, 429, 449, 461, 501, 582; a source of W.'s peculiar power, 2, 628, 631; Blake and Hudson on, 39; W.'s emphasis on, 39-46, 52; meaning of to W., 39; W.'s strong sense of in his youth, 43-4; shown in W.'s fondness for books of travel and adventure, 44, 351; W.'s emphasis on perhaps influenced by Burke's Sublime and Beautiful, 47-8, 52-3; develops character and imagination, 48; source of W.'s belief in the ministry of, 48; connected with animism, 48, 81-2; with imagination, 49, 255, 459; with memory, 49, 53; prevents apathy, 49-51, 241, 482, 621; leads to democracy, 51; to a lofty conception of man, 51; enlarges the mind, 51; connected with W.'s love of romance, 440; with wonder, 482-3, 490; weakening of W.'s sense of, 628, 631

Feise, E., xviii

Fenwick, Isabella, W. confident of his greatness, 299; on W.'s rooms at Cambridge, 341; W. lacked power over his will in composing, 348; on the strength of W.'s feelings, 367

Fleming, J., 330, 336, 340

Fool of Quality, The, 385

Fotheringham, J., on W.'s distrust of analysis, 318, 380; on W.'s emphasis on feeling, 379

Fraser, W. G., on certain passages in P., 426, 437-8, 583

Freedom, importance of in education stressed by W., 378-9, 385-6, 408, 463; W.'s love of, 385, 407, 463; W.'s love of for himself, 407-8; W.'s life unusually free, 407-8; W.'s love of influenced his poetry, 408; and his love of wandering, 416-7

French, J. C., xviii

French Revolution, 105-6; W.'s reaction to effects of on himself made him a great poet, 279, 493-4; W. did not realize this, 279, 494; W. did not connect this reaction with development of his imagination, 279, 285, 289; P. to counteract the depression caused by outcome of, 282; W.'s interest in at first slight, 419, 431, 432, 499; awakened through his affections, 478, 499; W. saw in it the idealism of Plutarch's heroes, 474, 504, 555; W.'s connection with, 493-599; Harper and Dicey on W.'s account of, 493, 503, 505, 522-3; why W. went to France, 497-8; why he became a "patriot," 501, 504; W. accepted the Revolutionists' faith in the virtue and emotion of the people and in the efficacy of constitutional reforms, 503, 505; W. shared the Girondists' admiration for Plutarch's heroes, 504, 555; theoretical and emotional basis of W.'s faith in, 520, 540; his belief in the people, 520, 532; effect on W. of England's declaration of war, 521, 523, 538-9, 547; of France's invasion of Switzerland, 523, 540, 558; shift of W.'s interest in to the abstract, to theory, 534, 539, 542; and to political science, 535; W. undis turbed by the excesses of, 537; W. loyal to till 1798, 540-1, 554, 558; English friends and enemies of drove each other to extremes, 547; W.'s despair at the outcome of, 547-50, 585; shook W.'s faith in feelings as guides, 625; led to development of "feeling intellect" in W., 626

Friendship, ministry of ignored in P. except in reference to Coleridge, 330

Froebel, F., 380, 387, 405

Galsworthy, J., quoted, 88

Garrod, H. W., 305, 420; on W.'s mysticism, 22-3, 93; on W.'s trust in the senses, 92; on P., i, 290, 300; his date for P., i, A 1-54 attacked, 291; on reason as opposed to pure sensation, 364; on W.'s central idea, 391; on the influence of Rousseau on W., 533; on "nature," 548-9; on "heart of hearts," 628
INDEX

Garstang, W., 124
"Genius," W.'s references to, 70, 85, 86
Genius, W. on, 127, 323; W. Duff on, 151
Gill, E., 269, 404
Gilmore, J. H., xiii
Gilpin, W., his books on picturesque travel known to W., 350, 569; his influence on Thoreau, 583
Godwin, W., 149, 588; underestimated the value of the emotions, 35-6; W.'s reaction from the rationalism of, 90; ideas of opposed by W., 134, 146, 147, 154, 386, 391, 550-1, 593; date of W.'s reaction from uncertain, 274; education which cultivates the imagination favored by, 390, 400; W. may have read in 1793, 516, 539; his conception of reason different from that of the Revolution, 535; believed reforms should not precede popular demand for them, 541; evidence of his influence on W. is slight, 543, 544-5; held we cannot argue from man as he is to man as he will be, 545; favored complete subjection to reason, 550, 565; denied freedom of the will, 550-1
Goethe, J. W. von, myriad-minded, 1; anti-intellectualism of, 151; his poetry not inevitable, 220, 261; attacks analysis, 318, 335; on wonder, 492
Goldene Aue, 460
Goodwillie, Mary, xvii
Grafflin, Marjorie, xviii
Grandeur, of nature and of man emphasized by W., 109-11, 623; may be conferred on the face of the humblest by Nature, 597-8; love the source of, 621
Gravedona, W.'s night at, 426, 429-30
Greenfield, K. R., 555
Grey, Viscount, on P., 299, 354, 386, 391, 522-3
Grierson, H., on W., 300, 307
Grisedale, 460

INDEX

on W., 533; on "nature," 548-9; on "heart of hearts," 628
Garstang, W., 124
"Genius," W.'s references to, 70, 85, 86
Genius, W. on, 127, 323; W. Duff on, 151
Gill, E., 269, 404
Gilmore, J. H., xiii
Gilpin, W., his books on picturesque travel known to W., 350, 569; his influence on Thoreau, 583
Godwin, W., 149, 588; underestimated the value of the emotions, 35-6; W.'s reaction from the rationalism of, 90; ideas of opposed by W., 134, 146, 147, 154, 386, 391, 550-1, 593; date of W.'s reaction from uncertain, 274; education which cultivates the imagination favored by, 390, 400; W. may have read in 1793, 516, 539; his conception of reason different from that of the Revolution, 535; believed reforms should not precede popular demand for them, 541; evidence of his influence on W. is slight, 543, 544-5; held we cannot argue from man as he is to man as he will be, 545; favored complete subjection to reason, 550, 565; denied freedom of the will, 550-1
Goethe, J. W. von, myriad-minded, 1; anti-intellectualism of, 151; his poetry not inevitable, 220, 261; attacks analysis, 318, 335; on wonder, 492
Goldene Aue, 460
Goodwillie, Mary, xvii
Grafflin, Marjorie, xviii
Grandeur, of nature and of man emphasized by W., 109-11, 623; may be conferred on the face of the humblest by Nature, 597-8; love the source of, 621
Gravedona, W.'s night at, 426, 429-30
Greenfield, K. R., 555
Grey, Viscount, on P., 299, 354, 386, 391, 522-3
Grierson, H., on W., 300, 307
Grisedale, 460

Hamilton, W. R., influence of on P., 411
Hamm, V. M., 259
Hardy, T., preface to Two on a Tower, 454; The Return of the Native, 462
Harper, G. M., Studies in Honor of; xviii; on W.'s appearance, 27; W. compounded of timorousness and courage, 312; on the Cambridge of W.'s day, 388; on W.'s reading, 351; on W.'s crossing the Alps, 373-4; on W.'s failure to visit Amiens, Rheims, Paris, 419; compares P., vi with Descriptive Sketches, 420; P. account of influence of London on W. "forced," 455-6; on P., ix-xl, 493; discovered W.'s affair with Annette, 508; thinks W. tried to bring Annette to England, 515, 524; on P., xiv, 605-6
Harrington, Janette, on W., 420
Hartley, D., associationism of, 306, 458; W. departs from, 308, 322; W. explains his love of nature by, 315; W.'s three stages may be derived from, 463, 491; W.'s necessitarianism perhaps derived from, 558
Hartsell, E. H., on the date of W.'s "Ode to Duty," 202, 640
Haydon, B. R., praised W.'s comments on painting, 497
Hazlitt, W., quoted Coleridge on W., 11; W.'s poetry like the mountains, 67; praised W.'s comments on Poussin, 214, 288, 497; W.'s subject-matter the common, 251; the general and permanent W.'s only realities, 303; praised the French Revolution, 535; cited W.'s remark on landscape painting, 570
Heard, W. A., 293
Heart, the, as the organ of insight, 140, 152; as the fundamental in man, 595-6; see also Passion
Herbert, G., the poetry of, 623
Herford, C. H., on W., 252, 599
Herrick, R., 459
"Hiding-places of man's power," W. preoccupied with, 2-6, 8, 483; meaning of the expression, 581
History, W.'s indifference to, 474, 500,
INDEX

551, 566, 587; in English histories
W. missed familiar incidents and tables of manners, 474
Hobbes, T., 203
Homer, 272, 542
Hooker, E. N., xviii, 420-1, 559, 604
Hooker, Mrs. E. N., 355
Hudson, W. H., on the ministry of fear, 39; on animism, 68, 86; on autobiography, 284, 287; his boy­ hood saturated with emotion, 336
Humor in W.'s poems and letters, 305,
313, 341, 359, 397, 442, 444
Hussey, C., The Picturesque, 583
Hutchins, Anne, xviii
Hutchinson, T., on Peele Castle, 527
Huxley, A., on W., 93, 300

Idealization, a function of imagination,
246, 254, 445; in the theatre essential to deep impression on W., 445;
of man, growth of in W., 452-79;
of life, we come to knowledge through, 463
Imagination, the theme of P., 4, 96, 206, 237, 255, 258, 278-9, 605; the faculty of communion with the invisible world and of becoming conscious of being permeated by the One, 4, 234, 236, 253; presents the world as alive, permeated by one spirit, 4, 234-5, 253, 621; inseparable from the higher love, 4, 233-4, 237, 245, 621-2; the mind wedded to the universe by, 4, 209, 216-17;
the heart of poetry, 9, 255; connected with infinity, 10, 238-45, 255, 263, 427, 613-14; connection of with truth, reason, reality stressed by W., 23, 25, 246-9, 254, 462; W.'s poems illustrate the power of to embody the significant in the trivial, 28, 249-51, 368, 592; connected with ministry of fear, 49, 255, 459; with animism, 81, 256; influences and is influenced by the reason and general outlook of the individual, 94; the significance of sense impressions bestowed on them by, 94-6, 101-2; unifying power of contrasted with the disjunctive influence of reason, 138, 317-18, 319, 331, 560, 594;
produces mystery, 143-4, 244, 254, 575, 580; connected with mystic experience, 169-70, 233, 238, 257,
279; W.'s conception of, 203-65;
Milton, Hobbes, Welsted, Blake,
Byron, Joubert, Emerson, Burke on,
203-5; creative power of, 204-5, 209-11, 613, 617 (see also Active, creative powers of the mind); discussion before W., 204-5; modern conception of derived from Kant by Coleridge and passed on to W., 205,
259; W. and Coleridge in substantial agreement as to, 205-29, 249, 254; W. differs from Coleridge as to, 205, 208, 209, 213-15, 219-20, 246, 254, 260; W.'s discussion of precedes Coleridge's, 206; primary imagination used by all persons, 207; primary and secondary imagination distinguished, 207-8; transforming power of, 208-9, 279, 613; working of illustrated in W.'s vision on Snowdon, 209, 211, 212, 232-7, 239,
611-15; in "Resolution and Independence," 210, 262; in The White Doe, 210-11, 578; abstracting power of, 210-11, 615, 616; transferring or pervading power of, 211-12, 613,
615; unifying power of, 212-15, 225,
414; unifying power of stressed by Coleridge not by W., 213-15, 254;
reconciles opposites, 213, 612, 615;
connected with emotion, 216-18, 220, 221, 237, 254, 255, 324, 578; possessed by dull, superstitious men, 217; does not deal with turbulent, unpleasant, or personal emotion, 218, 285; nature an ideal subject for,
218, 256; relation of to nature, 218,
245, 278-9, 403, 449; lapse of time between an event and composition of a poem recording it, 218, 221-2, 426; directed, Coleridge held, by the conscious mind, 219-20, 254; usually conceived by W. as spontaneous, 219-20, 254; most active in childhood and youth, 220-1; possessed in its full strength by childhood and youth,
220-1, 231, 237-8, 253-4, 263, 345,
INDEX

64, 483, 592; man’s craving for, 10; connected with imagination, 10, 239-45, 263, 427, 624; refers to greatness of the spirit, 173, 258, 242; sense of, distinguished from consciousness of God, 183, 427-8; suggestion of, in the conclusion of many of W.’s more imaginative passages, 238-9; a suggestion of necessary to poetry, 240; as the boundless, 240-1; as the antithesis of the trivial, 241-2; as the eternal or changeless, 242, 263, 303; loosely used by W., 242-3; cannot be conceived by the human mind, 242-3; how the imagination may suggest it, 243-4; such suggestion essential to great art, 244-5; connected with the universalizing power of the imagination, 244-5; inseparable from God and immortality in W.’s thought, 624

Inge, W. R., on anti-intellectualism, 126; on mysticism, 162, 177, 179; on the unity of personality, 320

Instincts, valued by W., 134-5, 386; W.’s faith in an aspect of his anti-rationalism, 405; W.’s faith in weakened in later years, 625

Intuition, 136-7, 232, 322, 363, 382, 386, 408; valued above reasoning by W., 501

Italy, W.’s low opinion of, 555; changed by his visit to, 555, 559

Jack the Giant-killer, 376, 389, 440

James, D. G., on imagination, 214, 215, 259, 576-7; criticizes W.’s view of science, 318-19, 404; on the "spots of time," 576-7

James, H., on loneliness, 54; on the imagination, 264

James, W., on the Binnenleben, 3; on the mystic experience, 163, 177, 178, 330

Jefferies, R., on the mystic experience, 155, 178

Johnson, S., 54, 225-6, 267; Rasselas referred to by W., 428

Jones, Claude, xviii, 421, 434

Jones, R. M., xvii; on mysticism, 177, 178

Jones, Robert, W.’s friendship for, 340, 417-18

Jonson, Ben, on Shakespeare, 455

Jouber, J., on imagination, 204

Joy, 332, 349, 360; importance of to W., 134; results from mystic experience, 175; the highest is the sense of being infused by the Deity, 179, 235, 476, 618; W.’s loss of, 199, 283, 628-31; associated with W.’s religion, 200; poets the happiest of men, 548; W. thought himself happy, 548

Kant, I., 1; on Vervunft und Verstand, 139; Coleridge’s conception of imagination derived from, 205, 252; Shawcross denies this, 259

Keats, J., a typical poet, 1; a metaphor of, 69; anti-intellectualism of, 127, 151; seeks knowledge, 149, 154; on the imagination, 248; loved color and perfume, 252; on melancholy, 381; Eve of St. Agnes, 394

Kipling, R., 117

Knight, W., on W.’s schoolmates, 340; on W.’s visit to Peel Castle, 527

Lamb, C., on W., 85; on the unifying power of the imagination, 214, 319; accompanies W. to Bartholomew Fair, 447, 451

Landor, W. S., quoted, 218; Coleridge on, 261; W. on, 264

Lang, V., xviii

Lawrence, D. H., 126

Le Brun’s Magdalen, W. moved by, 497, 499

Legouis, E., W.’s province the common, 11, 265; W.’s sovereignty lies in depicting man’s feelings about nature, 88; on sounds preferred by W., 97, 293; W.’s early poems anti-rational, 146; on emphasis on psychology in Lyrical Ballads, 293-4; on P., ii, 276-81, 324, 336; W. the first to give adequate poetic treatment to London, 436; points out a personal reference in Letter to
INDEX

Mathetes, 451; on "Vauclercour and Julia," 506, 510; on W.'s withdrawal to the world of abstractions, 543-4; W. borrows from Godwin, 544; referred to, 588; on the problem of melancholy in W., 640
Leuba, J. H., on mysticism, 177
Lewis, C. S., 262
Lienemann, K., on W.'s reading, 350, 351
Life in all things, W.'s consciousness of, 82, 170-1, 332
Lindbergh, Anne, 269
Locke, J., 322
London, W.'s mystic experience on first entering, 158, 161, 163, 166, 470-1; W.'s encounter with the blind beggar, 172; the beauty of felt by W., 227-9, 437, 447, 451; W.'s description of, 435-51, 470-9; based on his first long stay, 435; supplemented by impressions received on later visits, 435; W. attracted by while disapproving of, 436-7, 441, 472; W. dissatisfied with his description of, 436; W. returns to it, 436; reasons for its excellences and limitations, 436; W.'s the first notable treatment of in verse, 436; contribution of to growth of W.'s interest in man, 470-1, 474, 476-7; the unity of man set forth by, 476; other contributions of to W.'s development, 496; see also Cities
Loneliness, a source of W.'s peculiar power, 2, 64; valued by W. as intensifying consciousness of the enduring, the One, 2-3, 303; essential to a writer, in H. James's opinion, 54; lonely places essential to nature's full ministry, 54-5, 61-2; lonely places and individuals dwelt on by W., 55, 59-60, 460-1, 591, 635; number of times W. uses words associated with, 57; found in cities, not with nature, 58; W. says little of the loneliness of the human spirit, 58; he did not suffer from it, 58-9; W. conscious of the isolation of genius, 59; to W. "lonely" a term of commendation usually applied to places, 59-60; enjoyed by Dorothy, 60; part played by lonely places in W.'s life, 60-1; intensified by bad weather, 61; W.'s love of lonely places not egotism or sentimentalism, 62; W.'s need of lonely places illustrated in his university life, 62-3; the nature of the ministry of lonely places, 63-4, 303, 483; W.'s power of describing them, 64
Louismet, Dom. S., 177
Love intellectual or spiritual, inseparable from imagination, 233-4, 237, 245, 621-2; hence the theme of P., 237; of the mother, importance of in development of the child, 321; see also Passion
"Love of man," meaning of in P., viii, 108-12, 585, 604; unpleasant light on W.'s, 446; theoretical nature of W.'s, 469, 473, 475-6; growth of, in youth, 485, 490; value of, 490
Lovejoy, A. O., xvii; on metaphysical pathos, 5-6; on pride, 151; on the meanings of "nature," 346, 507, 558, 604, 627, 657; on rationalistic uniformitarianism, 519-20
Lowell, J. R., on wonder, 480
Lyons, C., 428
MacGillivray, J. R., 514
McKenzie, G., 335-6
MacLeish, A., 121
Macmurray, J., on the rationality of thought, 559
Man, pre-eminence of due to his emotional capacity, 37, 132, 468; growth of W.'s realization of worth of common man, 90, 452, 589-603; superior to nature, 95-6, 122, 403, 430-1, 468, 490, 572, 581, 627, 637; "love of" in P. means "admiration for," 108-12, 585, 604; W. not fond of most individuals but of mankind, of shepherds in general, 110-11, 124; W.'s love of shepherds due to association, 111-12; intercourse with correct errors arising from preoccupation with the intellect, 133; development of W.'s lofty conception of, the theme of P., viii, 279, 452; development of W.'s interest in, 332, 356,
360, 362, 419, 420, 432, 455, 468-71, 474, 476-7; stimulated by fancy, 465; effect of W.'s interest in, 406; contribution of Cambridge to, 469; contribution of London to, 470-1, 474, 476-7; conceived by W. as a single spirit, 473; growth of W.'s realization of the worth of common man the theme of P., xiii, 585, 588; W. esteemed common men partly because they possess real feeling, 593; books belittle such men, 594; W.'s poetry to deal with humble man living close to nature, 595-603; previous poetic treatment of these men lacked W.'s realism, imagination, and feeling, 596; W.'s exaltation of them a plea for sincerity and truth, 596

Martineau, H., on W., 16

Marvell, R., 303

Mary of Buttermere, 442-3; W.'s lines on illustrate the process of composition, 443

Mathematics, W.'s interest in, 383, 410-11, 412, 462, 552

Mathews, W., 433

Matter-of-factness of W., 11-28, 280, 313, 397, 505, 537; contribution of to W.'s poetry, 9, 23-5; Coleridge on, 11-12, 15, 16, 24, 26, 258; leads to excessive detail, 12-16, 26-7, 512, 612; shown in titles of his poems, 12, 13, 16, 26; due to difficulty of distinguishing the essential from the accidental, 14-16; due to tyranny of memory, of the actual, 14, 16, 426; in the man as well as the poet, 16-17; due to his treating the seemingly unimportant, 17-18; less harmful because his poetry sprang from recollected emotion, 18; due to his northern stock, 18-19; to his love of the real, 21-5; a defect of his excellences, 23; shown in his notes to his poems, 26; responsible for some of his monosyllables, 312

Melancholy, disapproved of by W., 37, 54, 62, 548; indulged in by W. when young, 66-7, 414, 421; influence of his brother's death on W., 198, 199, 526, 605, 606, 630, 631, 638; an important theme in W.'s verse, 198-9, 630; W. troubled by, 199, 283, 297, 341, 414, 547-8, 628-31; W.'s early verse influenced by 18th century literature of, 414; of Evening Walk, 414; of Descriptive Sketches, 414, 420-1; of W.'s appearance, 414; of Swiss trip, 420-1, 425, 428; of Coleridge, 548

Memory, renovating virtue derived from, 573-8, 581; see also Wordsworth, W.

Metaphysical pathos, 5-6, 193

Mill, J. S., "standing antagonisms of practical life," 5; on W., 27, 38, 149; attacks analysis, 335

Mind of man, the, wedding of to nature celebrated in W.'s poetry, 4, 209, 216-17; main region of W.'s poetry, 96; the universe valueless unless wedded to, 115, 490; nature fitted to, 117; mystery of, 580; see also Man

Monk, S. H., 52, 583

Moore, T., Diary of, 627

Morley, Edith, xv, 202

Morley, F. V., Dor a Wordsworth, 433

Morley, H., 447

Mueschke, P., on W., 52, 508

Muirhead, J. H., on Coleridge, 319-20

Mystery, 424, 429; W.'s sense of a source of his peculiar power, 2, 628, 631; importance of in W.'s thought, 2-7, 46, 141-6, 152-3, 168, 341, 370, 396, 483; W. H. Hudson on, 39; produces animism, 81; related to wonder, 143-4, 483, 580; to imagination, 143-4, 244, 575, 580; W.'s sense of came in part from his early surroundings, 145; frees from subjection to the trivial, 241; importance W. attached to illustrates his romanticism, 492; of human nature, 580-1; weakening of W.'s sense of, 628, 631
INDEX

Mystic experience, the, 155-78, 383, 483; Quarles on, 155; R. Jefiferes on, 155; relation to of times in W.'s boyhood when external world seemed inherent in him, 155-6, 170, 175-6; of the Wanderer, 156, 162, 164, 167, 174; usually marked by partial loss of consciousness, 156-9, 161-2; of W.'s dedication, 157, 163-5, 365-7; of W.'s first walk round the lake during his first university vacation, 157, 162-3, 165, 170, 175; of W.'s first entering London, 158, 161, 163, 166, 470-1; of W.'s first encountering the leech-gatherer, 158, 165-6, 167; of W.'s crossing the Alps, 158-9, 164-6, 169-70, 173, 427; described in Immortality Ode, 159, 165, 173; in "Tintern Abbey," 159, 161, 165, 166, 173, 174; of St. Paul, 160; of Plotinus, 160; of Tennyson, 160, 172, 177; of Emily Brontë, 160; difficult to describe, 160-1; characteristics of, 160-2; what is gained from, 162-5, 175-6, 330, 427; W. James on, 163, 177, 178; the description and interpretation of often colored by the beliefs of the recipient, 163-4; so with W., 163-4; conditions leading to, 165-7, 427; nature or an idea the moving cause of, 165-6, 182; how it begins, 166-7; as it develops the external world fades from consciousness, 166-7, 333; connected with emotion, 167; not recognized as such by W., 167-71, 427; connected with imagination, 169-70, 233, 238, 427; connected with the times when W. felt one life in all things, 170-1, 178; akin to other memorable experiences in W.'s life, 171-2; W. predisposed to, 172; W.'s encounter with the blind beggar an approach to, 172; did not for W. suggest communion with God, 172-4; more frequent in early life, 174-5, 178; yields joy, light, integration of personality, and a sense of the unity of all things, 175-6; reveals the limitations of the intellect, 176, 178; much of W.'s dynamic derived from, 176; the Catholic Church recognizes that it may be colored by the bias of the recipient, 177

Mysticism of W., a source of his peculiar power, 2; rooted in the senses, 22-3; opposed to analytical reason, 140; W.'s general attitude mystical, 168; as shown in his communion with nature, 168; W.'s intense consciousness of one life in all things the essence of mysticism, 178, 179; mystical feeling mingled with physical sensation characteristic of W., 430

Napoleon, 519, 526, 540, 558

"Nature" conceived as the norm fused in eighteenth century with idea of external nature, 104-5, 586; W. would have made this fusion independently, 104; various meanings of in W.'s writings, 200, 264, 353-4, 403, 410, 463; = truth, reality, 248, 264, 353-4; = instinct, 342, 506, 507, 537, 598-9; = congenital qualities, inherent disposition, 346, 410, 533, 627; = personified cosmic order, 346, 506, 526, 546, 593, 595; = external world personified, 462; = my nature, 465; = human nature, 491, 503, 546, 548; child of, 537; "pure imagination" results from following, 546; = the normal, rational, 546, 548; = the immutable laws of being, 566; confusion and fallacy in the use of, 590; = the system of truths expressing relations between fundamental categories of thought, 637; = God conceived as identical with the material universe, 637

Nature, external: not "red in tooth and claw," 124; religion of, 173, 179-202; W. rarely conscious of the Deity in his communion with, 173-4, 182-4; religion of never renounced by W., 198-200; relation of to imagination, 218, 245, 278-9, 403, 449; works as if with an imaginative power, 228-9; permeated by the Divine, 234-5, 253, 621; must be discerned spiritually, 245; imagination the eye for such discernment, 245; originally the theme of P., 278; feeling should be separated from the observation of, 332, 634; visionary power resides in poetry of, 403; this power due to imagination, 403; love of blends with love of man, 457, 458; in lake country more delicious owing to character of its inhabitants, 458; there man's occupations are dictated and dignified by, 459, 590; W. insisted on accuracy in landscape painting, 570; dominance of the eye, 570-1, 572, 583; occupations associated with, fit subjects for poetry, 598; poets have lived close to, 599; W. never thought of himself as a poet of, 637

Nature, external, attitude of W. towards: preferred the simple, the abiding in, 2-3, 58, 97, 104-6, 123, 302-3, 411, 412, 449, 551, 587; wedding of to mind of man celebrated in W.'s poetry, 4, 51, 209, 216-17; W.'s observation of accurate, 17, 22, 25, 26, 328, 406; insisted on accuracy in descriptions of, 22, 23, 100; importance attached to sense impressions by W., 22-3, 90-2, 132, 324; preferred and was most influenced by the sublime and terrible in, 46, 299; later learned to love quieter aspects of, 46; attracted by bad weather, 46, 61, 100-1, 303-4, 314, 358, 447, 460, 615; preferred the lonely in, 59-61, 97; W. may have thought of as the anima mundi, 74, 190-8, 301, 382, 462, 568; fitted to the mind of man, 83, 117; the attitude of W. towards arose from boyhood experience, 88; strengthened by reaction from the Revolution and rationalism, 88-9; W.'s philosophical poetry seeks to justify the importance he attached to nature, 89; this theorizing came late, 89-90, 94, 409; Aldous Huxley on W.'s falsification of, 93; how W. came to theorize about, 94; sense impressions must be transformed by imagination, 94; their significance bestowed on them by the mind, 95-6, 101-2; nature inferior to the mind, to man, 95-6, 122, 403, 450-1, 468, 490, 572, 581, 627, 657; valued by W. less for its beauty than its ministry, 96-101; fades from consciousness after initiating a lofty mood, 98, 166-7, 333; analytical and picturesque approaches to, criticized by W., 100, 568-70; W.'s observation of not that of a naturalist, 100; subordination of detail to the whole praised by W., 100; mist, twilight, night achieve such subordination, 100-1; W.'s theories about distinguished from his experiences with, 101-8, 112, 117-21; qualities attributed to which it calls forth from us, 102; W. ignores the transitory, cruel, cataclysmic in, 106, 114, 121, 124, 303, 586; men living close to idealized by W., 115, 124, 596; yet W. saw their faults, 115, 592, 596; fitted to man, 117; W. sees each object as suffused by the objects surrounding it, 212; stages in the development of W.'s love of, 312, 316; fancy ministers to this development, 465; men close to idealized by W. as having real feeling, 593

Nature, external, ministry of: a chief means of communing with the One, 4; a chief means of developing the affections, 32; love essential to ministry of, 34-5, 101; W. agreed with Coleridge, "we receive but what we give," 34, 581; contribution to of silence, solitude, loneliness, darkness, fear, mystery, bad weather, and wonder, 46, 54-5, 61-2, 298, 483; ministry of when unobserved, 98-9; W. confused esthetic with moral influence of, 102-3; W.'s excessive claims for ministry of questioned, 104-13, 118, 121, 254, 297, 333, 410, 455; nature does not furnish a norm of conduct, 104-8, 131-2, 586; W. attributed to nature excellences due to his inheritance and early training, 108, 116, 386; love of nature does not lead to love of man, 108-12; influence of animism on belief that nature loves man, 112-13; dangerous influence of, 114-15, 125; conditions governing ministry of, 115-16; moral influence of, 116, 125; influence of depends on our conception of, 117-18, 121; what nature may do for man, 118-21, 132; shapes the soul to majesty, 120, 448-9; relation of fancy to omitted from P., 276, 289, 632; Immortality Ode not a recantation of W.'s doctrine of, 321-2; close observation of steadied W., 345; the simple and powerful in minister most, 449; sympathetic, receptive attitude towards necessary, 572; familiarity with inhibits littleness and pride, 572-3; W. thought inadequately treated in P., 632

NED, 311, 388, 410, 416, 423, 448, 456, 457, 465, 474, 556, 591, 610, 616

Newman, J. H., attacks wonder, 487
Newton, Sir Isaac, 350
Newton, J., W. borrows from, 412
Nicolai Klimii Iter by Holberg, 536
Nicolson, H., on wonder, 480
Norris, E., xviii

Ossian, W. on, 212, 413

Pantheism, 74; defined, 185-6; W. accused of, 186-8, 477; W.'s vital faith close to, 186-8, 190, 197-8; W. evasive concerning, 186-7; passages in W.'s verse which may indicate it, 187-8, 190, 202, 319, 333, 595; passages in P. savoring of softened or suppressed in revision, 188, 200, 319, 382, 477, 501

Park, Mungo, W.'s interest in, 616
Parker, H. T., 504
Parker, W. R., 559
Pascal, B., 131

Passion, "emotion recollected in tranquillity," 18, 218, 221-2; emphasized by W., 29-31, 200, 302, 539, 567, 593; sensibility thought an evidence of virtue, 30, 37, 478; dangers of, 31, 37, 114-15, 123; P. says little of family affection or romantic love, 31-2; nature a chief means of developing, 32; W.'s emphasis on feeling in education, 32, 379; unifying power of, 33, 320, 565-6; mysteries of, 33, 565; W.'s conception of, 33; W. on the value of, 33-6, 101, 130-2, 544; linked to imagination, 33-5, 216-18, 220, 221, 237, 254, 255, 324, 578; to the mystic experience, 34, 167; essential to the ministry of nature, 34-5, 101; may be akin to reason, 36, 151, 382-3; of the lowly stressed in Lyrical Ballads, 37; of W.'s poetry helped J. S. Mill, 38; personal and tumultuous emotion avoided in W.'s poetry, 114, 218, 272-3, 276, 285; undue devotion to reason may lead to neglect of, 130; neglect of dangerous, 130-1; importance of stressed by Coleridge, 131, 138; man's greatness due to his emotional capacity, 132, 468; should be separated from observation in dealing with nature, 332, 654; emotional basis of W.'s early idealism and enthusiasm for the French Revolution, 478, 499, 534, 540; W. thought romantic love badly handled by most poets, 510-11; a source of great poetry, 511; W. feared to write about romantic love, 511-12; W. sought a non-emotional basis for the hopes of man, 543-4; W. weary of, 545-6; importance of for a just view of life, 564; emotional uniformitarianism, 566, 594; early feeling strengthens later feeling, 579-80; W. esteemed laboring men partly because they possess real feeling, 593; "'The Brothers'" and "'Michael'" written to show that the poor can feel deeply, 593; W. declared men deny delicate feelings to the poor, 593-4; sentimentalism encouraged this denial, 594; feeling a surer criterion than taste in literature, 594; greatness of the human spirit lies in love, 621; W.'s confidence in abated in his later years, 625; checks pride, 626; see also Heart, Love
Passiveness, valued by W., 136-7, 146, 568, 587; connected with indolence, 408
Pater, W., W.’s function to open the soul of little things, 28, 250, 604; passion in W., 29, 30; W.’s animism, 68; W.’s delicate observation of sounds, 293; Italy and Switzerland had too potent a life to be used in W.’s poetry, 447-8; P., xii, xiii, 562; W.’s exaltation of rural life a plea for sincerity, 596
Pathetic fallacy, 69-71, 85, 457
Paul, Saint, mysticism of, 168
Permanent, the, see Enduring, the Personification, of natural forces and abstractions, W.’s tendency towards, 72-5, 474; in poetry, W.’s attitude towards, 354
Petrarch, F., 88, 151
Picturesque approach to nature, disapproved by W., 100, 568-70; vogue of, 569
Pierce, F. E., on W., 452, 491
Pitt, W., satirized by W., 445; criticized by W., 522
Place-names, local, usually avoided or eliminated in revision, 384, 459; a passage containing many, 459-60
Platonism in P., 301, 303, 307, 397, 489
Play, importance of in W.’s conception of education, 376-7
Plotinus, 160, 167
Plutarch’s Lives, admired by W., 474, 504
Poetic diction, W.’s attitude towards, 252, 635; W.’s theory of, the literary translation of his social doctrine, 598
Poetry, Bacon on, 475; Shelley on, 488
Poetry, W.’s conception of: truth the soul of, 11, 22, 248; time should elapse between observation and composition, 18; imagination essential to, 21; accurate observation essential to, 22; not the product of the deliberate activity of the conscious mind, 136, 219-20; active, creative power required for the composition of, 138, 207, 316-17, 321-4, 331, 342-5, 380, 403, 573, 581, 599; loftiness of W.’s conception of, 245; distinguished from philosophy by W., 262; distorted word-order in condemned by W., 348; a passage composed immediately after the occurrence of the event it records, 426; function of, according to W., 511; passion its source, 511; scrutinized by reason and found wanting, 565
Poets, their endowments exaggerated by W., 234, 262; each is unique, 258; "the happiest of all men," 262, 548, 629; requisites of, according to W., 294; may use the humblest material if it is associated with nature, 598; have lived close to nature, 599
Pope, A., 122, 127, 264; W. borrows from, 401; W.’s knowledge of, 402
Poussin, N., W. on, 214
Powell, A. E. (Mrs. Dodds), on the three ages, 491; on W.’s view of artistic creation, 604
Power, W.’s emphasis on, 46-7, 472-3, 475, 618
"Powers," W.’s animistic use of, 70, 73-6, 384-5, 460, 567, 600, 617-18
Pre-existence, W.’s reticence as to, 79; W.’s belief in, 306, 345, 400, 401; W. overlooks, 492, 573
Prelude, The, deals with what really matters but is seldom mentioned, 1-2; explores the dimly understood or the sub-conscious, 2, 6-8, 325; imagination the theme of, 4, 96, 206, 237, 255, 258, 278-9, 605; the merely personal, local, and non-contributive omitted from, 8, 271-3, 384, 418, 459, 498, 527, 609; machinery of creaks, 17, 313, 417, 430; deals with the outwardly unimportant, 17-18; says little of family affections, friendship, or romantic love, 31-2; animism marked in MS V of, 75-7; capitalization of "Spirits," "Beings," "Powers" in, meaningless, 85, 391, 398; anti-rationalism of, 148-9; nature or significance of incidents in not understood by W., 155-78, 324-
INDEX

8, 362, 365-6, 368-70, 395; as a factual autobiography unsatisfactory, 270; omissions, 270-3, 275-6, 284-5, 289, 423, 430, 494, 516; simplification of facts, 270-1, 283, 295-6, 346, 394, 439, 496, 498, 603, 611; conceived as a serious, universal work of art, 271, 384; conscious reticence of, 271, 276, 285, 549; traces development not of the whole man but of certain traits in him, 273-4; W. dissatisfied with, 274, 387, 606; structure of, poor, 274-87, 404, 452-3; ignores influence of the warmer emotions, 276, 330; unimportant incidents described, 277; diversity of purpose in, 277-9, 282-3, 287; passages in composed apart from their context, 277, 331, 404, 491, 571, 585, 610, 634, 638; and with no thought of illustrating a thesis, 277-8, 287, 610; nature rather than imagination the original theme of, 278; the two reconciled, 278-9; biographical veracity of, 280-7, 325; later thoughts and feelings read into early incidents, 280-2, 287, 341, 354, 395, 410, 431, 450, 462, 610; an honest work, 280-1, 286-7, 499; details in may be invented, 280, 500, 527; "all gratulant," 282-3, 286-7, 629; Coleridge on the purpose of, 282, 617; Coleridge's plan for, 283; pictures W.'s development as a steady growth, 283, 295-6, 346, 469; does not idealize W., 284-6; reasons for omitting affair with Annette, 285, 509-12; repetitions in, 293, 297, 308, 366, 401, 422, 441, 446, 450, 463, 466, 489, 581, 626, 636; repetitions in omitted from final text, 292, 357, 359, 362, 397-8, 432, 443, 467, 499, 566, 581, 600, 620, 634; how W. came to write, 294-5, 296-7, 632; when begun, 294-5; philosophic comment found in earliest texts of, 298, 317; alliteration in, 307, 329, 340, 359, 368, 461, 462, 498, 517-18, 555, 579, 600; alliteration removed in revision, 308, 357, 460, 518, 528, 554-5, 562, 578-9, 610, 611, 614; imagery of, 308, 350, 354, 357, 361, 371, 400, 409, 413-14, 417, 424, 429, 431, 443, 469, 471, 480, 495, 499, 501, 517, 520, 521, 522, 523, 526, 537, 545, 552, 554, 564-5, 567, 573, 586, 587, 619, 623, 627, 635; style and diction of frequently stilted, or pompous, or awkward, 310-11, 313, 344, 357, 362, 442, 522; monosyllabic lines, 311-12, 333, 341, 345, 361, 362, 382, 398, 400, 403, 408, 443, 454, 460, 461, 463, 466, 467, 471, 473, 479, 501, 505, 512, 515, 518, 523, 527, 533, 619, 635; W. did not object to monosyllabic lines, 311-12; characteristic lines and passages in, 313, 345, 357, 370-1, 393, 446, 554, 573, 583, 587-8; changes in the text of even more numerous and complicated than appears in de S., 315, 552, 609; digressions in, 316, 325, 330, 357, 589, 592; long sentences in, 329, 384, 448, 519, 552, 587, 589; Bible, the, borrowing from in, 333, 489, 519, 522, 533, 554, 555, 621, 635; blends separate occasions into one, 337, 415, 435, 437, 447, 496, 498; MS W of, 339, 356, 371, 373; double negatives in, 341, 361, 467, 606, 634, 635, 636, 639; does not distinguish between feelings and awareness of feelings, 343; wordiness, diffuseness of, 351, 366, 450, 499, 518; " and which" in, 353, 500, 619, 632; significance of incidents not seen by W. when they occurred, 369, 373-5, 395, 429-30; lines in made up of adjectives, of participles, or of nouns, 382, 424; prolepsis in, 382; repetitions added in final text, 383; uncharacteristic lines and passages in, 383, 460, 599-600; satire in, 387, 445-6, 544; unity of single books of, 395, 397; MS V of, places incidents in different settings and gives less philosophic comment than later MSS, 395-6, 573-4; selection and order of incidents in considered with care, 396; unrhymed quatrains in, 425; vii-xiv of reveal a falling off in freshness, depth, and passion, 435; loosely-knit, repetitious character of VIII, 452-3; chiasmus in, 499, 548, 563, 593; W.'s period of rationalism and despair treated vaguely and briefly in, 516, 531; anacoluthon in, 523; latest events mentioned in, 526; ground covered more than once in, 533-4, 542, 565; xii-xiv show the effect on W. of John W.'s death and the absence of Coleridge, 562, 607; W.'s later style in, 563; prosody of, 563, 564; truly religious verse in, 597; gives two accounts of W.'s coming to realize that common man may be noble and may be the subject of noble poetry, 602; these accounts omit some steps in this development, 603; also later developments in the opposite direction, 603; style and diction of xiv, 605-6; originally planned to end with the first long vacation?, 607; represents as a gain W.'s loss of joy and the dulling of his sense of fear and mystery, 628-31; with one exception completed in spirit in which begun, 631; includes material originally intended for The Recluse, 632; purpose which led to composition of soon overlooked, 632; least satisfactory, W. held, in its treatment of books, nature, fancy, human nature, 632; ends at the date with which it opens, 635; latest events referred to in, 636

Prelude, The, respects in which the final text differs from the earlier: the 1850 text would perhaps have been preferred by W. in 1805, xiv; not necessarily less accurate, xiv; conservative changes in easily discounted, xiv; esthetically superior, xiv; eliminates animism, 77-8, 301; less suggestive of pantheism, 188, 200, 319; more orthodox or sanctimonious, 200, 343, 344, 382, 519, 597, 606, 623; eliminates the local and personal, 272-3, 459; adds only one incident and one other long passage, 275-6, 423, 434; less spontaneous, 291, 296, 331, 611; more condensed, 291, 299, 313, 341, 349, 351, 354, 362, 370, 407, 438, 444, 445, 446, 463, 466, 471, 473, 499, 518, 553, 556-7, 566, 579, 586, 589, 620, 633, 635, 636; eliminates "sweet" and "sweetly," 292, 307, 313, 460, 587, 656; more accurate, 296, 413, 433, 500, 610, 620; less clear, 299, 308, 417, 418, 444, 466, 474, 525, 531, 532; eliminates the verb "to be," 300, 367, 432, 461; punctuation of inferior, 302, 304, 314, 318, 320, 331, 348-9, 359, 361, 384, 439, 441, 448, 449, 529, 557, 563, 618; omits auxiliaries, 307, 398, 403; more literary, less simple and moving, 308, 331, 357, 359, 367-8, 370, 402-3, 411, 443, 444, 591, 636; smoother, more euphonious, 308, 358, 398, 438, 442, 443, 444, 446, 448, 467, 562, 572, 586, 587, 611, 620, 623, 628; omits details given in earlier texts, 311, 356, 397, 406, 465, 527, 634; less vigorous, 318, 448, 620; more vivid, 329, 398, 424, 518, 528, 554, 579, 601; less frank, 341, 523; less natural, 348, 466, 609, 655; clearer, 354, 358, 361, 383, 425, 442, 446, 449, 450, 462, 466, 468, 500, 503, 504, 518, 533, 562, 587, 620; less stilted, 561; less condensed, 370, 443; more formal, or pompous, 398, 443, 500, 521; omits pedestrian passages in early texts, 406, 407, 410, 417, 425, 430, 634; farther from W.'s original thought or feeling, 410, 442, 444, 528, 594, 611; shows less religious feeling, 412, 626; less smooth, 424, 528; simpler, 438, 546; more pedestrian, 438; less vivid, 444, 525; less simple, 450, 581, 591; omits passages which interrupt the course of thought, 455, 566, 633; or are irrelevant or unnecessary, 457, 458, 461, 466, 469, 620; less monosyllabic, 467, 473, 518, 587, 601; less pedestrian, 470, 600; pietistic changes in misrepresent the W. of 1798-1805, 606

Prelude, The, passages in commented
INDEX

Primitivism in W.'s poetry, 344-5, 385
Psychology, interest In shown in W.'s writings, 17, 23, 293-4, 297, 315, 358, 442
Pyramids, the, 245
Quantocks, the, 636
Quarles, F., quoted, 155
Rader, M., on W.'s animism, 78, 86
Rainbow, W.'s fondness for, 142, 616
Raleigh, W., on W.'s matter-of-factness, 26; on W.'s recovery from rationalism, 132; on "flatness" in P., 360; W. moved only by the simple and isolated, 436; London left nothing for W.'s imagination to do, 447; on how a poet is made, 494; W. thought romantic love unsuited to the higher poetry, 511; on W.'s choosing humble life for his poetry, 590; W. held grandeur of nature comes from the mind, 621
Ravine of Gondo, described by W., 428
Rawnsley, H. D., 309
Raymond, W. O., 265
Raysor, T., 491
Read, H., on W., 508, 514; on W.'s matter-of-factness, 18-19; on biographical truth of P., 283-4; on lateness of W.'s discovery of the significance of the lake region to him, 342-3, 553-4; on the Annette episode, 508, 524
Reality, W.'s love of, 21-5, 246-52; his poetry based on, 23-5; beauty and nobility of, presented by the imagination, 246-8; development of W.'s conviction that his poetry should deal with, 276; real shepherds appeal to imagination more than do those of pasturals, 462; we learn through first seeing life idealized, 463; reality that is too close and intense is not suited for verse, 533; W. learned through first seeing life idealized, 534
Reason, distinguished from understanding, see Vernunft and Verstand; W.'s conception of, 138-9, 141; its relation to imagination, 229-32, 247-8, 253, 262, 475; three kinds of distinguished by W., 362-4; its relation to passion, 382-3; identified with "nature," 546, 548
Reason, analytical or practical, 383, 525, 533, 567; errors of taught W. the unifying power of feeling, 33; attacked by Donne, Rochester, Premier Baldwin, 126; disparaged by W., 126-54, 317-18, 363-4, 382, 400, 544, 631; W. brought to despair by exclusive devotion to, 129; evils of exclusive devotion to, 130, 150, 551, 564; nature may teach us more than, 132; how the errors of may be corrected, 132-5; not "pure" but conditioned by the personality and environment of the reasoner, 134, 551, 559; W. once thought men of the future would be governed by, 134, 564, 566; affected by joy, 134; opposed by animism, intuition, instinct, 135-7; limitations of due to conscious, deliberate method of, 136-7; critical analysis repudiated, 137; destructive power of contrasted with unifying, creative power of imagination, 138, 317-18, 319, 331, 560, 594; opposed by mysticism, 140-1; blinds one to the mystery in all things, 141-6, 152-3; esteemed by the Revolutionists, 519; difference between conception of held by Revolutionists and by Godwin, 535; W. turned to in 1793, 538-9, 542; W. sought to base the hopes of man on, 543-4; W.'s devotion to continued through his period of despair, 551-2; poetry scrutinized by and found wanting, 565; complete subjection to favored by Godwin, 565; separates man from man, 566, 594; see also Anti-rationalism, Vernunft and Verstand
Regrets, W. disclaims any, 282
Religion, W.'s, 179-202; W. may have thought of Nature as the anima mundi, 74, 190-8, 301, 382, 462, 568; W. conscious of one life in all things, 168, 170-1, 178, 182, 184-5,
187, 195, 273-4, 281, 325-7, 332-3, 344, 468, 567, 618; nature associated with what was vital in, 173, 181-202; W. not conscious of God in his intercourse with nature, 173-4, 182-4; the consciousness of being infused by the Deity was to W. the highest joy, 179, 235, 476-7, 618; W. fundamentally religious, 179-80, 257; but, until 35, not distinctively Christian, 180; W.'s orthodoxy, 180-1, 200, 344, 468, 524, 567; W.'s heterodoxy, 180, 188-9, 198; animism, the most powerful element in during his boyhood, 182; culminated for W. in the mystic experience, which was usually associated with nature, 182; difference between religious feeling of "Tintern Abbey," 93-102, P., ii. 386-418, and W.'s Kesswil letter, 184-5; W. expresses belief in an impersonal force rather than a personal God, 185, 188, 412; W.'s vital religion close to pantheism, 186-8, 190, 197-8 (see also Pantheism); W. tried to be orthodox but with imperfect success, 188-9; W.'s religious beliefs unsettled and inconsistent, 189, 197; reasons for doubting that W. thought of Nature as the anima mundi, 193-7; religious beliefs of most persons complex, 197; religion of nature never renounced by W., 198-200; truly religious verse in P., 200, 597; unpleasant piety of parts of P., 200, 519, 597, 606, 623; religion of W.'s later years, 200; W.'s truly religious verse belongs to his middle years, 200, 429; nobility of W.'s life owed little to the orthodox faith, 200; few references to Christ or the cross in W.'s poetry, 201; meaning of "semi-atheist" applied by Coleridge to W., 201; W.'s attempts to express his conception of the Deity, 301; W. conceived of God as transcendent and as revealed in nature, 306-7; W. devoted to the idea of the Church of England, 411, 462; see also Mysticism, Mystic Experience, Pantheism, Unity

Reynolds, Sir Joshua, 265
Richards, I. A., 154; on the prevalence of anti-intellectualism, 126; on imagination and fancy, 491; on the relation of knowledge to emotion, 559
Richardson, L. C., 434
Robinson, E. A., 462
Robinson, H. C., editions of used, xv; on W., 240, 251, 265; W. indifferent to sculpture and painting as art, 497; W. "a still man," 497
Rochester, Earl of, 126
Rockefeller Center, architecture of, 245
Rodin, A., 245
Rogers, S., on W.'s love for his friends, 30, 478
Romanticism, not a disease, 5; meets needs of the spirit not satisfied otherwise, 5; will not pass away, 10; a learned movement, 149; and "the renascence of wonder," 492; stresses the individual, the unusual, in character or experience, 595
Rousseau, J.-J., 384; on pride, 151; on education, 375, 385, 386; cared for classical history only, 474; influenced W., 533, 593
Rowe, Addie F., xvii
Ruskin, J., on imagination, 491
Ryan, E., 177
St. Evremond, C., on the vast, 5
St. Pierre, B. de, emotional uniformitarianism of, 594
Savage, D. J., 309
Santayana, G., on romanticism, 10
Science, W. critical of, 21, 128, 147, 158, 318-19, 380, 404; humanists' antipathy to, 151
"Self-" compounds of, characteristic of W., 311 Sense impressions, W.'s vivid memory of, 14, 92, 293, 357, 371, 396, 413, 500; importance of for W., 22-3, 90-2, 132, 324; wisdom derived through, 90, 92; significance of bestowed on them by the mind, 95-6, 101-2; workings of imagination and mystic experiences spring from, 170; all are modified by imagination, 207, 321; an instance of uncolored by the intellect, 307; not W.'s chief concern, 402; W. agitated by his vivid memory of, 413; W. valued less in his later years, 625; see also Nature, external

Seven Champions of Christendom, The, 389, 390

Shaftesbury, third Earl of, 87, 112

Shakespeare, W., 1, 69, 179; W. borrows from, 193, 296, 382, 467; on imagination, 247; W.'s admiration for, 272; W. weeps at reading, 478

Shawcross, J., on the danger of using isolated faculties, 150; Kant did not influence Coleridge on the imagination, 259; on man's relation to nature, 430; on the distinction between imagination and fancy, 465, 491

Shearer, E. A., 52

Shelley, P. B., a typical poet, 1; vagueness of his poetry, 25; vividness of his imagination, 72; "Hymn to Intellectual Beauty," 142, 307, 373, 466; the poet a creator, 209, 617; stimulated by color and perfume, 252; praises W.'s creative powers, 259-60; W. praises, 288; The Assassins, 314; on imagination and reason, 317, 622; on the function of poetry, 488, 565; "The world's great age," 535

Sigourney, Lydia H., on W.'s sad look, 414

Silence, a source of W.'s peculiar power, 2, 64; valued by W. as intensifying consciousness of the ending, the One, 2-3, 303; valueless without love, 38; number of times "silent" or "silence" occurs in W.'s poetry, 57; meant more to W. than lack of sound, 57-8; why valued by W., 303, 396, 483; Brydges's sonnet on, 464

Solitude, 343, 347, 369, 423, 619; a source of W.'s peculiar power, 2, 64; valued by W. as intensifying consciousness of the ending, the One, 2-3, 303; "the main romantic motif," 54; reprobated by Johnson, 54; hermits disapproved of by W., 54; essential to nature's full ministry, 54-5, 61-2, 298, 483; incidents and individuals connected with dwelt on by W., 55-7, 396, 447; a feature of the Wanderer's youth, 55; W.'s love of not egotism or sentimentalism, 62; W.'s love of contrasted with Byron's, 62; W.'s early love of companionship, 62-3; why W. valued, 63-4, 303, 312-13, 462, 483; W.'s ability to describe, 64; importance W. attached to indicates his romanticism, 492

Smith, L. P., 259

Smith, Nowell, on the date of W.'s "Ode to Duty," 202, 640; on various passages in P., 298, 304, 424, 428, 429, 471, 522, 564, 618

Smith, Sydney, on Oxford, 337

Snowdon, Mount, W.'s interpretation of the vision seen from, 209, 611-16; date of W.'s ascent of, 607-8

Snyder, Alice, xviii; Coleridge's reconciliation of opposites, 586

Snyder, F. B., 65

Sounds preferred by W., 97; W.'s sensitiveness to, 292-3, 297, 304, 314, 329, 397

Southerly, R., came to fear strong feeling, 30; books his passion, 128, 416; W. on his Madoc, 259; on the epic ferment in the late eighteenth century, 296; cared only for classical history, 474; on his own early republicanism, 504; on the French Revolution, 558

Spenser, E., a typical poet, 1; W. on, 272; influenced W., 546

Sperry, W. L., 336; review of W.'s relations with Annette, 508; on P., xii. 317-20, 582

Spingarn, J. E., 259

Spinozism, Coleridge on, 82, 87; W. accused of, 382

"Spots of time," see P., xii. 208-335 and Imagination

Stars, W.'s interest in, 360, 361

Stephen, L., on W., 38, 580, 598

Storms, rarely mentioned by W., 114, 124-5

Sutherland, J., on "We are Seven," 14

Superstition better than apathy, 80-1, 87, 147
Swift, J., anti-intellectualism of, 127
Swinburne, A. C., on W., 29
Swiss trip of W. and Jones, 418-34; a wilful undertaking justified by its success, 419; influence of on W., 419, 431; motive prompting it, 419; why Amiens, Rheims, and Paris omitted, 419-20; differences between W.'s three descriptions of, 420-1; melancholy mentioned in these accounts of, 420-1, 425, 428; maps of, facing pp. 420, 422; itinerary of, 421-2; omissions from P. account of, 423, 430
Symonds, J. A., on the mystic experience, 177, 178
Tanquerey, A., 177
Taste, W.'s undergraduate taste in books, 409-10; W. conceived as the opposite of imagination, 471; W.'s comments on, 471
Taylor, T., xviii; on the "spots of time," 584
Taylor, W., influenced W., 502
Tee, L., xviii
Templeman, W. D., on Thoreau, 583
Tennyson, A., 153; on the mystic experience, 160, 172, 177; "Flower in the Cranned Wall," 486
Thies, Frieda, xviii, 558
Thomson, J., the poetry of, quoted, 4; read by W., 87, 112; decorates abstractions derived from philosophers, 122; W. borrows from, 352, 429, 461; W.'s "Stanzas written in 'Castle of Indolence,'" 415
Thoreau, H. D., 54; influenced by the picturesque movement, 583
Thorpe, C. D., 259, 260
Three stages, the, in W.'s development, 463
Tillyard, E. M. W., on W., 11, 294
Transplanting, salutary effect of, 493; shown in W.'s work, 493-4
Travel, books of, not used by Coleridge and W. to illustrate how imagination works, 249; W.'s fondness for and debt to, 306, 350-1, 417, 433, 471, 591, 616; difference between Coleridge's and W.'s use of, 355; their place in the development of wonder, 484
Trevor, J., 177
Triviality, the infinite as the antithesis of, 241; W. impatient of, 241, 351, 362, 448, 579
Turnell, G. M., 153
Twilight, W.'s love of, 303
Tyson, Anne, 357
"Under-" W.'s fondness for compounds of, 145, 294, 352, 415, 425, 448, 597, 614
Underhill, E., on mysticism, 177
Unity, of W.'s thought, 8, 257-8; W. felt there is one life in all things, 82, 170-1, 332-3, 428, 432, 476; relation of this feeling to animism, 82-4; W.'s emphasis on, 133, 299, 319, 414, 521, 628; consciousness of related to mysticism, 175; achieved only by the imagination, 212-15, 319, 476; Coleridge's emphasis on, 213-15, 319-20, 595; of man, set forth by imagination, 235-6, 253; shown in the city, 476, 477; stressed by W., 594-5; of P. not planned, 278-9, 286; of consciousness stressed by W., 316, 318; by Dean Inge, 320; unifying power of feeling, 320, 565-6, 594-5
Utopias, 536, 558
Vallon, Annette, W.'s connection with, 218, 270, 285, 496, 591, 625; reasons for silence concerning in P., 285, 509-12; why W. did not marry, 502; W.'s relations with suggested in "Vaudracour and Julia," 506-15; our ignorance of important parts of the affair, 508-9, 514-15; W. leaves, 517; influence of W.'s feelings about on his general outlook in 1793-7, 545-6, 548, 635
Vast, the idea of the, attacked by St. Evremond, 5; effect of sought in art, 5; admired by Coleridge, 390
Vernunft and Verstand, 501, 567; distinction between developed by Coleridge, 138-9, 152; W.'s vague awareness of this distinction clarified by Coleridge, 139; meaning of, 139; W. sometimes terms Vernunft "the heart," 140; analysis the work of the Verstand, 318; W. uses "reason" to cover both, 362-4; akin to imagination and fancy, 465; akin to intellectual power and practical reason, 563
INDEX

Wallace, W., 321
Wandering, W.'s love of, 351, 407, 416-17, 591, 635
Warburton, W., 373
Wasserman, E., xviii
Watts-Dunton, T., on wonder, 487; on Browning, 492; on romanticism and wonder, 492
Wells, H. G., 144
Welsted, L., on imagination, 203
Whately, E., on W., 16-17, 310-11
Whitehead, A. N., on W., 212, 290
Whitman, W., 68, 269; mystic experiences of, 178; his lists of objects recall W.'s, 441; his wonder before nature, 486; moved by faces in a crowd, 502
Whitney, L., 123
Whittington, Dick, 440-1
Wilkinson, T., Tour in Scotland, 225
Wiley, B., on W.'s beliefs, 122; on P., xii. 279-80, 581
Williams, C., on reason, 373
Wither, G., quoted by W., 265
Winstanley, D. A., on eighteenth-century Cambridge, 337-8, 352-3
Wolf, J. Q., Jr., xviii, 309, 491
Wonder, ministry of, 480-92; a source of W.'s peculiar power, 2; related to mystery, 143-4, 580; frees from subjection to the trivial, 241; W.'s emphasis on, 351; related to W.'s love of romance, 440; various writers on, 480, 486-8, 492; opposed to apathy, 482; associated with fear, 482, 490; with nature, 482-3; preserved by the poet, according to Coleridge, 483; influence of in childhood and youth, 483-5; influence of on the favored child, 484; ministry of more philosophic wonder on the adult only suggested by W., 486, 487; kinds of, 487; and Lyrical Ballads, 487-8; and romanticism, 492

Wordsworth, Anne (W.'s mother), 135, 137, 386-7, 626
Wordsworth, Christopher, Memoirs, 180

Wordsworth, Dorothy, her Journals, 13, 224, 261-2, 361; sensitive to the quieter beauties of nature, 55; enjoyed loneliness, 60; untouched by animism, 79; influence on W., 129, 502, 552, 553, 561, 588, 626, 627, 628; W. visits, 332, 439; on W., 348; on W.'s Swiss tour, 424, 425-6, 428, 433; W.'s love for, 477-8, 626, 627; W. talks freely of his pleasures only to, 497; visits Annette with W., 514; her Journal silent as to Annette, 514; thought to be heroine of the Lucy poems, 515; separated from W. 1791-4, 516; opposed to the picturesque, 570; described in P., xii. 151-73?, 572; not with W. in summer of 1789, 579

Wordsworth, Gordon, xiii, xvii; "The Boyhood of W.," 313; identifies "the Hall," 314; on the readings of P. MSS, 633, 634

Wordsworth, John, effect of his death on W., 198, 199, 526, 605, 606, 630, 631, 638; W.'s parting from, 460; effect of his death on P., xii-xiv, 562, 607

Wordsworth, Mary (W.'s wife), 415, 514; described in P., xii. 151-73?, 572, 591

Wordsworth, William, believed last text of an author should be followed, xiv; found his first expressions often detestable, xiv; his memory, 14, 92, 280, 293, 337, 371, 396, 500; influenced by the pure northern stock from which he sprang, 18-19; his school days at Hawkshead, 39-53, 55, 78-9, 290-336; appearance of, 27, 414; his meeting with the discharged soldier, 42, 49, 55, 65, 368-72; his watching the drowned man's clothes, 42, 49, 395-7; his ascent of Snowden, 46, 211, 231, 235-7, 263, 274, 482, 571, 607-15; his first trip
Wordsworth, William—Continued

to France and Switzerland, 56, 419-34; his student days at Cambridge, 62-3, 337-55; came of excellent stock, 108, 116; had sound early training, 108, 116; his youth non-intellectual, 129; his first walk round the lake in his first long vacation, 157, 162-3, 165, 167, 175, 358; his dedication, 157, 163-5, 345-7, 332-3, 344, 468, 567, 618; his trips to Wales, 270, 275, 494, 607; considered writing an epic or romance, 295-6, 409; an excellent skater, 304; his adolescence, 324-8; his adolescence came late and slowly, 327-8; his interest in girls aroused, 327, 360, 366-7; growth of his conviction that he was a poet, 328, 365-6, 527-8, 552-3; his first university vacation, 356-74; his second year at Cambridge influenced by his new interest in girls, 406; matured late but aged early, 409; his second university vacation, 415; stimulated by boughs tossed in the wind, 438, 582; date of his first trip to Paris, 498; his condition and state of mind in 1793-5, 516, 547, 548; his farewell to his youth, 517; his 1792 stay in Paris due to change in plan, 517; date of his return to Paris, 518; may have thought he could save the Revolution, 519; effect on of England’s declaration of war, 521, 523, 538-9, 547; effect on of France’s invasion of Switzerland, 523, 540-1; his state of mind in 1792-3, 538; his political views in 1794, 542; despairing of moral questions turned to abstract reasoning, 549-50; waning of his interest in politics, 550; his wandering over Salisbury Plain, the effect of, 599-600; his exalted mood during, 600; decline of his creative powers due in part to domestic cares, 624; his stay at Alfoxden, 636; see also Vallon, Annette, French Revolution, London

Wordsworth, William, the mind of: reasons for studying, 1-2; its limitations, 1; fundamentally poetic, 1; abundant material for study of, 1; W.’s treatment of in P. of unusual value, 1-2; profoundly imaginative, 2, 518; sources of its strength, 2; aspects of stressed in the present study, 2, 7-8; central idea of, 2; his strong sense of mystery, 2-7, 46, 141-6, 152-3, 341, 370, 396, 483; religious, 2, 179-80; sought universals, the eternal, 2, 121, 344; preferred the simple, the abiding, in nature, 2-3, 97, 123, 449; concerned with infinity, 4, 64, 483, 592; not rhapsodic or sentimental but head-hardened, 6, 9, 33, 150; passionate, 6, 30-1, 92, 327-8, 366-7, 445, 524; honest, 7, 94-5, 280-1, 286-7, 325; unity of his thought, 8, 237-8; vividness of his sense impressions and of his memory of them, 14, 71, 92, 293, 337, 371, 396, 500; his careful observation, 17, 22, 25, 26, 328, 406; his love of romance, 19-21, 351, 357, 402, 440, 444, 457-8, 517, 591; attached great importance to imagination, 21; critical of science, 21, 128, 147, 158, 318-19, 380, 404; love of the real, the common, 21-5, 246-52; power of self-analysis and interest in psychology, 23, 293-4, 297, 315, 358, 442, 444, 445, 499, 504, 518, 521, 532, 540, 547, 624; affectionate, 30-1, 54, 58, 477-8; tended to regard sensibility as evidence of virtue, 30, 37, 478; inclined to pantheism, 74, 186-200; admired humble man, 90; not fond of abstractions, 92, 213-14; stressed the positive, creative vs. inhibitive, corrective, 117; pro-intellectualism of, 127-8, 149-50; distrust of bookishness, 128-9; haunted by echo, rainbow, cuckoo, glowworm, 142; tolerant of human weakness and lawlessness, 147, 154, 407, 433, 537-8; general character of, 150, 376; common sense of, 150; priestly conception of his office as poet, 180, 292, 342, 619; virtues of, 200; not a great reader, 202 (see also Books); tended to attribute every good quality to whatever he valued, 234; conscious of his limitations, 251, 274, 387, 606; uniqueness of, 258, 282, 341; a careful artist, 271, 381; the most English of poets, 272, 391, 537; reserved, 272; self-criticism of, 274, 338, 347, 348, 361-2; self-confident, conscious of his mission, 299, 407, 596; self-esteem of, 299, 312, 341, 359, 397, 442, 444; both timorous and courageous, 312; wilful, 348, 407, 419, 439; purity and temperance of, 352, 439, 444; W. at Cambridge unaware of deeper passions or terrified by them, 352; intolerant of sophisticated, indoor amusements, 365; love of independence, 385, 407, 463; indolent, 408, 438, 449; moved only by the simple and isolated, 436; disregarded the individual and considered the abstraction, man, 452, 462, 473; craved power, 472, 618; often moved to tears, 478, 499, 501, 637; his faith in man shaken?, 485, 538, 545-6; thought himself qualified for a poet, landscape-gardener, and art critic, 497; "a still man," 497; shrewd discernment of, 500; valued continuity in development, 521-2; effect on of break in continuity, 521-2, 538; local and associational sources of his spiritual life, 521, 538; shared the grim spirit of the Hebrew prophets, 525; tolerant of the excesses of the Revolution, 537; happy, 548 (see also Melancholy); in his rationalistic period preferred the abstract, 551; at one time a Necessitarian, 558; his first bent towards grandeur, austerity, 588; love of the unassuming things developed after 1795, 588; did not think of himself as a poet of nature, 637; see also Animism, Anti-rationalism, Fear, Imagination, History, Humor, Loneliness, Man, Mathematics, Matter-of-Factness, Mysticism, Matter-of-Factness, Mystic Experience, Nature, external, Passion, Poetry, Religion, Silence, Solitude, Wonder
Wordsworth, William—Continued

Wordsworth, William, the poetry of: its subject, 2-4, 637; its purpose, 4, 24-5; often vague and obscure, 6-7; honest, 6-7, 94-5, 280-1, 286-7, 325; contribution of his matter-of-factness to, 9, 23-5; its subject-matter the humble, familiar, common, 11, 17-18, 24, 28, 249-52, 265, 402, 592; titles of often long and needlessly detailed, 12, 13, 16, 26; exact observation shown in, 17, 22, 25, 26, 328, 406; derived from emotion recollected in tranquillity, 18, 218, 221-2; that of 1797-8 reveals absorption in the concrete, 17; and in psychology or sociology, 17, 23; reveals keen interest in psychology, 17, 23, 293-4, 297, 315, 358, 442; illustrates power of imagination to embody the significant in the trivial, 28, 249-52, 368, 592; family affections and romantic love slighted in, 31-2; W.'s early verse influenced by Gothic romance and graveyard poetry, 52; favorite words in, 57, 59, 65; at times classical, 62, 384, 460, 556, 595; the mind of man the main region of, 96; personal and tumultuous emotion avoided in, 114, 218, 271-3, 285; the personal eliminated in revision, 272-3; often composed long after occurrence of the event which inspired it, 218, 221-2; subject matter of owes its significance to what imagination does with it, 250-1, 402; chronological arrangement of opposed by W., 272; radical revision of avoided, 275-6, 565; growth of conviction that the common should be W.'s field, 276; composed aloud and out of doors, 292; feeling developed in gives importance to the action, not vice versa, 368, 598; weak in architectonics, 452, 565; an unrevised piece of, 480; shows W.'s natural expression was ponderous and pomp-
Wordsworth, William—Continued

ous, 480; wherein essentially romantic, 492; suffered from Coleridge’s absence from England, 562, 607, 638; valued by W. as a new power in literature, 596; W. expected many would dislike it, 596; W. hoped his peculiar faculty lay in treating humble man living close to nature, 599; may be very unlike the occasion which stimulated it, 600; W. never thought of as dealing primarily with external nature, 637

Wordsworth, William, the works of:

"Alice Fell," 251
"A narrow girdle," 440
"Anecdote for Fathers," 17, 146, 369
"A Poet!—He hath put," 71
"Aquapendente, Musings near," 130, 137, 153
"At Rome—Regrets," 152, 400
Autobiographical Memoranda, 497, 498
"Beggars," 147
"Blind Highland Boy, The," 19-20, 631
"Bologna, At," 526
Borderers, The, 153, 549; W.’s preface to, 544
"Brook! whose society," 83
"Brothers, The," emphasizes dignity of the poor, 452; written to show that the poor feel deeply, 593
"Brougham Castle, Song at the Feast of," 38, 57, 142; wordy title of, 26
"Burns, At the Grave of," 252, 276, 603
"Celandine, The Small" ("There is a flower"”), 630
"Celandine, To the Small," 23, 632
"Character, A," 418
"Characteristics of a Child three years old," 393
"Cuckoo, To the" ("O blithe"”), 466
"Cumberland Beggar, The Old," 368, 455-6; anti-rationalism in, 146, 153; meaning of 73-9, 202; Wordsworth, William—Continued the beggar stripped of romantic charm, 250-1

"Daisy, To the" ("In youth"”), 135, 569, 571, 632-3
"Daisy, To the" ("With little here"”), 226
"Dear native regions," 467
Descriptive Sketches, 100, 184, 201, 222, 363, 414, 459; animism in, 77, 618; relation of to P., vi, 420, 423, 425, 426, 428, 429, 432; melancholy of, 420-1; composed in part at Blois, 509; P., viii and xiv borrow from, 461, 608, 611, 638; “Nature’s child” in, 537; reference to the picturesque in a note to, 569-70
"Dion," 288
"Dog, The," 358
"Duty, Ode to," 363, 470, 618; date of, 198, 640; expresses W.’s loss of joy and the dulling of his imagination, 199, 631
"Enough of climbing," 95
"Enterprise, To," 525
"Evening of extraordinary Splendour and Beauty, Composed upon an," 639

Evening Walk, 14, 17, 27, 100, 414, 457, 553; Fenwick note to, 552-3; reference to Gilpin in, 569

Excursion, The, anti-rationalism of, 87, 130, 131, 148; criticized as pantheistic, 186-7, 447, 501; “despondency corrected” the theme of, 199, 630; perhaps referred to in P., xi. 282-7, 549

I, 55-6; 108-22, 15; 108-433, 385; 118-300, 32; 120-36,39-40; 133-6, 51; 197-218, 156, 162, 164, 174; 203-5, 457; 211-12, 619; 219-20, 302; 226-30, 51, 181; 241-2, 634; 252-7, 413; 261-3, 326; 280-300, 326, 524; 362-4, 123; 453-936, 603; 475-87, 29, 80, 87; 475-916, 368

II, 234-6, 145; 240, 363; 829-74, 610; 865-9, 481; 863-90, 46 iii, 317-22, 21; 513-49, 636; 680-

xlvii

INDEX
INDEX

Wordsworth, William—Continued

991, 549; 842-6, 618, 628; 928-33, 449

iv, Argument, 131, 335; 138-9, 532; 269, 363; 613-21, 80; 829-37, 87; 957-68, 317; 1018-21, 619; 1126-55, 101-2, 131, 139, 231-2, 317-18, 554; 1207-29, 103

v, 257, 363; 501-4, 363; 502-22, 139; 558-69, 134 vii, 526-7, 230; 894-900, 73; 367-73, 511

ix, 1-20, 194-6; 44-92, 650; 63-6, 101

"Expostulation and Reply," 74, 136, 618

"Farmer of Tilsbury Vale, The," 147, 433

"Female Vagrant, The," see Guilt and Sorrow

"Fidelity," 13, 26

"Force of Prayer, The," 415

Fragments printed in de S.:

p. 508: 188, 197

p. 512: 141, 188, 319

pp. 553-9: 50, 399, 401, 466, 480-92; an example of W.'s unrev. verse, 480; style and diction of, ponderous and pompous, 480; similar to P., xiv. 157-69, 620-1; reasons for rejecting, 485-6; see also Wonder

p. 562: 492

pp. 592-4: 103-5, 481-2, 572

pp. 600-5: 56, 211, 457, 464, 615-16

p. 606: 571, 623-4

"Gipsies," 50

"Glad sight," 35, 115-16, 132, 621

"Great men have been," 555

Guilt and Sorrow, 206, 246, 368, 602; emphasizes pathos of the poor, 452; P., xiii. 323-49 based on an early draft of, 600; shows that W. early realized the lowly were fit subjects for poetry, 602-3

"Happy Warrior, Character of the," 363

"Hart-Leap Well," 86, 190

"Highland Girl, To a," 56, 91-2, 226-7, 557

"Idiot Boy," 17, 146, 251

"Immortality, Ode, Intimations of," 30; on apathy and fear, 51; animism in, 69, 568; anti-rationalism in, 143, 148; mystic experience in, 159, 165; W.'s loss of joy, 199, 628, 629-30, 631; imaginative power of children, 237-8; echoes of in P., 308, 345, 400, 440; not a recantation of W.'s doctrine of nature, 321-2

"Inscription XIII," 630

"Isle of Wight, At the," 522

"It is a beautiful evening," 238

"I wandered lonely as a cloud," 91, 449, 577

Kesswil letter to Dorothy concerning Swiss trip, 185, 222, 420-1, 426, 429, 433

"Kilchurn Castle, Address to," 77-8, 148, 224-5

"Kitten and Falling Leaves, The," 650

"Laodama," 31, 363

"Last of the Flock, The," 146

Letter to the Bishop of Llandaff, composition of, 516

"Linnet, The Green," 632

"Long Meg, The Monument commonly called," 599

"Loud is the Vale," 26, 56, 244

"Lucy Gray," 20-1, 55-6, 246

"Lycoris, Ode to" ("An age"), on youthful love of melancholy, 414

Lyrical Ballads, 368; W.'s purpose in, 11, 228, 250, 487-8, 592, 639; deal with the essential passions as incorporated in nature, 30; historically important emphasis on the passion of the lowly, 37; the feeling in gives importance to the action, not vice versa, 250, 368, 598; emphasize pathos of the poor, 452; W. expected them to displease many, 596; influenced by Dorothy and by W.'s recovery from rationalism and the Revolution, 626; Preface to, principles of illustrated in "Vaudracour and Julia," 512; in the "spots of time," 583-4
INDEX

Wordsworth, William—Continued

"May Morning, Ode composed on," 459
"Michael," 456; the flowering of W.'s matter-of-factness, 25; W.'s love of shepherds due to associationism, 111-12; anti-rationalism in, 146; the characters of stripped of romantic charm, 250-1; humor in, 305; emphasizes dignity of poor, 452; and their depth of feeling, 593
"Michael," overflow from, 153, 181, 482, 597
"Morning Exercise, A," 466
"Most sweet it is," 99, 579
"Not in the," 115
"Not 'mid the World's," 120
"Nutting," 305; silence in, 57; animism of, 76, 77; omission of from P., 275-6; a later emotion read into the incident?, 281, 354
"Ode" ("Imagination—ne'er "), 525
"O'er the wide earth," 193
"Peel Castle, Elegiac Stanza suggested by a Picture of," flowering of W.'s realism, 25; wordy title of, 26; "the light that never was" an illusion, 28, 247, 264; praises passion, 38; location of the castle, 527; deals with W.'s loss of joy, 631; 33-40, 53-6, 631-2; 36, 628; 51, 441

Peter Bell, matter-of-factness of, 12; illustrates misdirected passion, 31; solitude in, 56; Spirits in, 73, 86; Peter insensitive to mystery, 143; 133-45, 20, 402, 506, 601; dedication of, 201, 601
"Poet's Epitaph, A," 146-7, 468, 568

Prelude, The, see Prelude, The "Presentiments," 135, 401, 414

Recluse, The, 294-5, 433, 458; purpose of, 148; youth indulges in melancholy, 441; material intended for included in P., 632; I. i. 309-57, 592; 401-9, 595; 592-7, 58; 686-8, 625-6; 703-25, 43-4; 726, 630

Recluse, The, "Prospectus," 193, 209; emphasizes the dignity of

Wordsworth, William—Continued
the poor, 452; 28-41, 44, 144; 42-7, 20, 21; 47-55, 29, 216; 63-71, 602
"Resolution and Independence," early version of illustrates W.'s matter-of-factness, 13-14; W. pleased with stark reality of, 22; reveals observation and thought, 23, 25; flowering of W.'s realism, 25; solitude in, 55; anti-intellectualism of, 146; an approach to the mystic experience in, 158, 165-6, 167; W. illustrates imagination from, 210; suggests the limitless, 240; owes its significance to imagination, 250-1; compared with Dorothy's Journal, 262; W.'s comment on, 368-9; emphasizes dignity of the poor, 452; its theme despondency corrected, 630
"Rob Roy's Grave;" 433
"Ruined Cottage, The," see Excursion, The, i. 453-956
"Ruth," 31, 114-15, 440
"Simon Lee," 17, 26, 143
"Skylark, To a," 633
"Solitary Reaper, The," 27, 55, 57, 142, 217, 440; illustrates the working of the imagination, 225-6, 244
"Spring, Lines written in Early," animism of, 568
"Stepping Westward," 19, 142, 240, 592
"Tables Turned, The," 90, 116, 152, 198, 568
"The confidence of Youth," 432
"The world is too much with us," 80
"Thorn, The," 12, 56, 219; W.'s note to, 30, 264
"Though narrow be," 20, 48
"Three years she grew," 597-8
"Tintern Abbey, Lines composed above," wordy title of, 26; mystic experiences described in, 34, 159, 161, 165, 166, 173, 174; stresses memory of sensations, 91; presents experience not theory, 95; nature the soul of W.'s moral being, 116-17, 132, 198; W. conscious of a personal Spirit in nature, 184-5, 196; W. troubled by loss of joy, 199, 629, 631; no strong emotion in, 217; 22-30, 455, 577; 22-57, 449; 33-5, 308; 36-46, 118-19, 153; 41-6, 99, 333; 63-102, 463; 68-72, 570-1; 80-3, 122, 633; 95-6, 142; 122-34, 113
INDEX

Wordsworth, William—Continued

" Toussaint L'Ouverture, To," animism of, 73, 454, 618; no strong emotion in, 217

" Two Thieves, The," 147

" Utilitarians, To the," 19, 252

Vale of Esthwaite, The, 414, 456, 467, 581

" Vaudracour and Julia," 494-5, 505-15; wherein different from P., ix. A 554-993, 505-6, 507; similarities of to W.'s case, 506, 507; W.'s " only unreadable poem," 506; contains one supreme passage, 506; out of place in P., 509; ineptness of, 512; incongruity of the two styles used in, 512; sentimental morality of, 512; attacks class prejudice, 512; exemplifies principles of Lyrical Ballads Preface, 512; irrelevant details in, 512; character of Vaudracour, 513;

throws no light on later history of W.'s love, 516

" Venetian Republic, On the Extinction of the," 217, 555

" Waggoner, The," 147, 219, 222

" We are Seven," J. Sutherland on, 14-15; anti-rationalism of, 146, 148; immortality taught in, 148, 625

" Westminster Bridge, Composed upon," 447, 451

" Where are they now?," 147

White Doe of Rylstone, The, 56, 415; W. refused antiquarian details for, 27-8; lines from "Kilchurn Castle" used for, 77-8; W. says illustrates creative power of the mind, 96, 210-11, 578; illustrates the power of the super-rational, 147-8; its theme despondency corrected, 630

" Wren's Nest, A," 632

" Yarrow Revisited," 95-6, 288, 612

" Yarrow Unvisited," 19, 56, 466

" Yes! thou art fair," 223

" Yew Trees," 227, 230, 409

Wrangham, F., 340