Promises and potential for Africa depend on six key nations.

Ethiopia, Ghana, Kenya, Mozambique, Nigeria, and South Africa: these six countries are poised to shape the African continent’s future. Africa’s Lions examines the experiences of these fast-growing or economically dominant countries, with expert researchers offering unique perspectives on the challenges and issues faced by all six.

Despite a growing body of literature on African economies, very little research has focused on the relationship between economic growth and employment outcomes at the country level. Without adequate empirical data and a robust evidence base, policymakers have found informed decisionmaking difficult. Harnessing country-level household, business, and national accounts data—together with existing analytical country research—the authors attempt to bridge this gap.

Between now and 2030, Africa will experience the largest share of growth of the working-age population worldwide. This volume offers an in-depth analysis of the relationship between economic growth and the structure of each country’s workforce, and the resulting implications—for human capital development, for the vulnerably employed, and for the working poor. It is an invaluable tool for policymakers and development practitioners as they construct the critical development policy agenda for Africa, a continent that will face significant challenges in the next decades.

HAROON BHORAT, Professor of Economics and Director of the Development Policy Research Unit at the University of Cape Town, is a nonresident senior fellow at the Brookings Institution. He specializes in research on labor economics, poverty, and income distribution. Previously, Bhorat served as economic adviser to several finance ministers and presidents of South Africa.

FINN TARP, Director of UNU-WIDER and a member of the World Bank Chief Economist’s Council of Eminent Persons, is a leading international expert on issues of development strategy and foreign aid, with an interest in poverty, income distribution and growth, micro- and macroeconomic policy and modeling, agricultural sector policy, household and enterprise development, and economic adjustment and reform.
