Emotion in the Tudor Court originated during my doctoral studies at the University of Texas at Austin, where I had the great fortune of being supervised by Frank Whigham. An unequaled scholar, mentor, and friend, it is to him that I dedicate this final product.

I am grateful to the countless instructors who have provided me with the tools to undertake such a project. As an undergraduate at Boston University, my thought was shaped by Laurence Breiner, William Carroll, Geoffrey Hill, Christopher Martin, Erin Murphy, and James Siemon. My graduate career was tirelessly supported both by the rest of my dissertation committee—James Loehlin, Jason Powell, Wayne Rebhorn, and Marjorie Curry Woods—and by the vibrant community of University of Texas scholars, including Samuel Baker, Douglas Bruster, Jean Cannon, Ann Cvetkovich, Linda Ferreira-Buckley, Gregory Foran, Elizabeth Hedrick, Hala Herbly, Jessica Kilgore, Jonathan Lamb, Eric Mallin, Noël Clare Radley, and Hannah Wojciechowski.

At Arizona State University, I have the privilege of working alongside a generous and talented group of colleagues. I am especially indebted to my friend and regular collaborator Cora Fox, whose critical eye has never failed to sharpen both my thinking and its presentation. I owe thanks also to Heather Ackerman, John Henry Adams, Karen Adams, Aaron Baker, Sally Ball, Lee Bebout, Dan Bivona, Robert Bjork, Ron Broglio, Joe Buenker, Gregory Castle, Deborah Clarke, Jessica Early, Melissa Free, Maureen Daly Goggin, David Hawkes, Kalissa Hendrickson, Julia Himerg, Cynthia Hogue, Tara Ison, George Justice, Devori Kimbro, Kristen Larue-Sandler, Devoney Looser, Mark Lussier, Ruby Macksoud, Edward Mallot, Heather Maring, Bruce Matsunaga, T. M. McNally, Keith Miller, Ian Moulton, Richard Newhauser, Krista Ratcliffe, Alberto Ríos, Kristin Rondeau-Guardiola, Bradley Ryner, Sarah Saucedo, Karen Silva, Robert Sturges, Linda Sullivan, Ayanna Thompson, Victoria Thompson, Elly van Gelderen, and Doris Warriner.

I am equally grateful for the wisdom and guidance of scholars elsewhere—many of whom I only know electronically. I thank Simon Adams, Amanda Bailey, Katie Barclay, Lisa Feldman Barrett, Todd Borlik, Susan Broomhall, Sukanta Chaudhuri, Mario DiGangi, Thomas Dixon, Natalie Eschenbaum, Charles Ess, Tiffany Florvil, Lisa Ford, Erika

I thank Cassie Miura and Marjorie Curry Woods for their assistance with the translation of foreign quotations.

Part of my work was funded by a grant from Arizona State University’s Institute for Humanities Research Fellows Program. I thank Sally Kitch, Jennifer Quincey, Rena Saltzman, and the IHR staff for their support.

I am grateful to Lambeth Palace Library for permission to quote from their holdings.

I am especially indebted to Gianna Mosser and the staff of North- western University Press for their tireless support of this project. I owe great thanks to Anne Gendler, Maggie Grossman, Liz Hamilton, Mar-ianne Jankowski, Paul Mendelson, Steven Moore, JD Wilson, and the anonymous readers of my manuscript. I also thank Marcus Keller, Ellen McClure, and Feisal Mohamed for including me in the Rethinking the Early Modern series.

Finally, this work, and all my work, would be impossible without the endless love of my family. To my parents, my grandmothers, Olivia and Penelope, and Jenny—thank you.
