Tropes of Transport

Pahl, Katrin

Published by Northwestern University Press

Pahl, Katrin.
Tropes of Transport: Hegel and Emotion.
Project MUSE. muse.jhu.edu/book/21273.

For additional information about this book
https://muse.jhu.edu/book/21273

For content related to this chapter
https://muse.jhu.edu/related_content?type=book&id=756247
Acknowledgments

This book has formed in many layers of learning, teaching, reading, and thinking together. I would like to thank my teachers Hélène Cixous, Judith Butler, Winfried Kudszus, Ann Smock, and Trinh Minh-ha. Each one of you not only taught me a specific approach to literary and philosophical texts but also taught me to dare. I want to thank the students in my Hegel seminars at Johns Hopkins University—in particular Florentina Costache, Malte Wessels, and Markus Wilczek—for the great discussions, thoughtful feedback, and intelligent objections. I cherish the vibrant intellectual milieu at Johns Hopkins and am grateful to my colleagues and mentors Amanda Anderson, Jane Bennett, Rüdiger Campe, Bill Connolly, Jennifer Culbert, Bill Egginton, Frances Ferguson, Dean Moyar, Mary Ryan, and Rochelle Tobias for discussing various parts and versions of this book with me. Without the support, encouragement, and critique of many colleagues whom I admire, this book would not have appeared: Gabriele Brandstetter, Anne-Lise François, Christine Hentschel, Simon Jarvis, Catherine Malabou, John McCumber, Christoph Menke, Terry Pinkard, Eva von Redecker, Denise Riley, Art Strum, Rei Terada, and Karen Tongson deserve more than my most sincere thanks. The book has profited from my fellowship as a visiting professor at the Cluster of Excellence “Languages of Emotion” at the Freie Universität, Berlin. I have shared versions of chapters at various colloquia and am grateful for the intense discussions and the feedback I received there, in particular at the Institut für Germanistik, Vergleichende Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaft of the University of Bonn (thanks to Christian Moser for inviting me), the Kolloquium für Sozialphilosophie at the Humboldt University (thanks to Rahel Jaeggi for the invitation), the Literaturwissenschaftliches Kolloquium of the University of Erfurt (thanks to Bettine Menke and Martin Schäfer for inviting me), the Deutsche Haus of New York University (thanks to Paul North for the invitation), and the Doreen B. Townsend Center for the Humanities at UC Berkeley (where I held a fellowship). I have fond memories of the Marxist philosophy group at the University of Bonn, in particular Leander Scholz, because we discovered Hegel together. Currently, I find intellectual kinship in the newly formed multidisciplinary research group “Material Lives of Emotionality” at Johns Hopkins University and thank them for discovering uncharted sites of emotionality with me.

I want to wholeheartedly thank the two anonymous readers for their very detailed and substantive comments on the manuscript. Henry Carrigan Jr., senior editor and assistant director of Northwestern University Press, stands out because of his superb editorial work and because he infected others (including me) with his excitement about this project. I was truly fortunate that Jane Bennett, Rebecca Brown, Jennifer Culbert, and Lisa O’Connell read drafts at a moment’s notice, and I thank them for their inspiration, encouragement, patience, and sociability. John Tinkler showed a great faculty of plasticity when he paid attention to both detail and the overall argument while editing an earlier version of this book. I thank Karen Tongson and Jennifer Culbert for eliminating unwanted remnants of German syntax in my English, Christina Hinz for her assistance in preparing the manuscript, Paul Mendelson for preventing me from going too crazy with last-minute changes during the copyediting process, and Martijn Buijs for expertly preparing the index. A part of chapter 7 is adapted from my article “The Way of Despair,” published in Hegel and the Infinite, edited by Slavoj Žižek, Clayton Crockett, and Creston Davis, © 2011 Columbia University Press. A part of chapter 5 has previously appeared as “A Reading of Love in Hölderlin’s Andenken,” in The German Quarterly 78, no. 2, © 2005 American Association of Teachers of German. I thank Columbia University Press and the American Association of Teachers of German for granting the one-time non-exclusive rights to use these publications here.

It was a special treat that my friend Jordan Tierney agreed to create the cover art for this book. Jordan read parts of the text and related them to aspects of her rich, intelligent, material-responsive, and chance-embracing work in sculpture and collage. I offered bits of readings of some of her pieces that particularly speak to my concerns. I love the result for what it is and for what it reminds me of, namely, the process of relating complex thoughts to the complex materiality of her art. I thank Jordan for these conversations and for the artwork that lends such a thick and yet translucent, fluid and yet parched, torn and yet exuberant face to the text.

Greetings to Maxine Fredericksen, the heart and free spirit of the Rhetoric Department at UC Berkeley, who is retiring this year after nearly twenty years of service as graduate student affairs officer. She importantly contributed to the great experience that Berkeley was for me. So did Rob Miotke, Will Bishop, and the working group in Critical Feminist Inquiry at the Doreen B. Townsend Center for the Humanities. I am grateful to Stanford University for a postdoctoral fellowship, and I want to thank the University of Southern California, in particular Alice Gambrell and Peggy Kamuf, for giving me the opportunity to spend a year in Los Angeles. Finally, I want to express my appreciation for German at Hopkins, where I received a wonderful introduction to the assistant professor experience.
TROPES OF TRANSPORT