American Dolorologies
Simon Strick

Published by State University of New York Press

Strick, Simon.
American Dolorologies: Pain, Sentimentalism, Biopolitics.

For additional information about this book
https://muse.jhu.edu/book/28834

For content related to this chapter https://muse.jhu.edu/related_content?type=book&id=1061875
Writing is one of the few forms of self-abuse in which a helping hand is sometimes necessary, says mystery novelist Walter Satterthwait. My affinity, thankfulness, and love go to the many, many helping hands, eyes, minds, and institutions who were instrumental in the shaping, refining, and getting done of this book.

I thank the German funding system for young scholars and the Graduate Program “Gender as a Category of Knowledge” at Humboldt University Berlin for their generous financial support during the years of writing. The American Studies Department at Humboldt University shaped me academically and intellectually and my thanks go out to the splendid colleagues I worked with there: Dorothea Löbbermann, Eva Boesenberg, Martin Klepper, Klaus Milich, Reinhard Isensee, Renate Ulbrich, and Suncica Klaas. The graduate program “Gender as a Category of Knowledge” was a wonderful and inspiring place to develop concepts, theories, and methodologies and I thank all the people I met there. Special credit goes to Christina von Braun, Volker Hess and Viola Beckmann. Elahe Haschemi-Yekani, Beatrice Michaelis, Maja Figge, Sven Glawion, Konstanze Hanitzsch, Jana Husmann, Daniela Hrazan, Claudia Brunner, Anson Koch-Rein, Wibke Straube, Julia Roth, and many more helped me with insightful commentary and fruitful suggestions.

Excellent thanks and endless gratitude to the magnificent and awe-inspiring spirit and mind of Gabriele Dietze who as supervisor, discussion partner, and general councellor on all things mundane and academic was instrumental in guiding this project, and myself.

Beth Bjorklund, Claire Raymond, Susan Fraiman, Jennifer Wicke, and Jennifer Ray Greeson were wonderful colleagues at UVA and critically provided support and advice during the completion and publishing of this book. Thanks also to audiences and colleagues wherever, who listened to the seldom-conclusive ideas and arguments that eventually added up to this text. My thanks to the many people in Charlottesville, Dublin, Wien, Lausanne, Bremen, Weimar, and Berlin.

My gratitude goes to the many people who provided spaces to live and work, and offered patience and support: WG Blinkenlichten, Gaby Dietze, and Michael Lattek in Berlin, Jacqueline Burkhardt and Thierry in Banyuls-Sur-Mer, and the wonderful Harbaugh family in Cville for shelter and storm. I greatly thank my family and friends for supporting me and enjoying the various stages of success with me. Carsten Junker deserves special mention for unexpected lessons about friendship.

Susann Neuenfeldt’s personality, mind, work, and heart can be felt everywhere in this book. I express my gratitude and love to your wonderful presence, it tempts me in and drives me far away.

This book is dedicated to the memory of Günter H. Lenz.