Contributors

Paul R. Abramson was Professor of Political Science at Michigan State University. He was author of Generational Change in American Politics (1975), The Political Socialization of Black Americans (1977), Political Attitudes in America (1983), Politics in the Bible (2012), and David’s Politics (2016). He was coauthor of Value Change in Global Perspective (1995) and of a series of eighteen books on US presidential and congressional elections, the most recent of which is Change and Continuity in the 2012 and 2014 Elections (2016). He was also a frequent contributor to encyclopedias, anthologies, and journals, including the American Political Science Review. He passed away February 12, 2018.

John H. Aldrich is Pfizer-Pratt University Professor of Political Science at Duke University. He specializes in American and comparative politics and behavior, formal theory, and methodology. Books he has authored or co-authored include Why Parties (1995, 2011), Before the Convention (1980), Linear Probability, Logit and Probit Models (1984), Interdisciplinarity (2014), and a series of books on elections, the most recent of which is Change and Continuity in the 2016 Elections (2018). He is past president of the Southern Political Science Association, the Midwest Political Science Association, and the American Political Science Association. He has been a Guggenheim fellow and is a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.
Antoinette Baujard is Professor of Economics at the University Jean Monnet at Saint-Etienne/University of Lyon. She is the deputy dean of the Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique research group GATE Lyon Saint-Etienne. Her areas of research are social choice theory, normative economics, and political philosophy. She is interested in understanding how ethical values affect social welfare functions in economics, evaluation of public policies, and voting rules. She has run in situ experiments to test different voting rules during the French presidential elections in 2007, 2012, and 2017.

Stefanie Beyens is Assistant Professor and postdoctoral researcher at Utrecht University. She has worked on new political party survival and elections, recently expanding her research agenda to include successful public organizations and their effectiveness and legitimacy.

André Blais is Professor of Political Science at the Université de Montréal. He is the leader of the Making Electoral Democracy Work Project and a former chair of the Planning Committee of the Comparative Study of Electoral Systems. He is a fellow of the Royal Society of Canada and a research fellow with the Centre for the Study of Democratic Citizenship, the Centre Interuniversitaire de Recherche en Économie Quantitative, and the Center for Interuniversity Research Analysis on Organizations. He is past president of the Canadian Political Science Association. His research interests include elections, electoral systems, turnout, public opinion, and methodology.

Damien Bol is Assistant Professor of Political Economy at King’s College London. His research lies at the intersection of political behavior, political economy, and comparative politics. His research interests are voting behavior, party strategies, and research methods. His work has appeared in numerous journals, including Comparative Political Studies, the European Journal of Political Research, and Political Science Research and Methods.

Jean-François Daoust is a post-doctoral fellow in the Department of Political Science at McGill University. His main research interests include political behavior, methods, and public opinion. He held the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada Joseph-Armand-Bombardier Doctoral Scholarship for 2015–18. He is affiliated with the Center for the Study of Democratic Citizenship (CSDC) and the Institute for Quantitative Social Science (IQSS) at Harvard University.
Abraham Diskin is a former professor of the Department of Political Science at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. He served as chair of the department and as chair of the Israel Political Science Association. He presently heads the School of Management, Government, and Law at the Academic Center for Law and Science. He is the author of twenty books and monographs and numerous academic articles published in leading academic journals.

Frédéric Gavrel is Professor of Economics at the University of Caen Normandie. He is affiliated with the CREM, a research center of the French Institute for scientific research. Labor (applied) theory is his main research field. His work also bears on experimental voting and more recently on the implications of social concerns.

Elisabeth Gidengil is Hiram Mills Professor in the Department of Political Science at McGill University. She is the founding director of the Centre for the Study of Democratic Citizenship. Her research focuses on voting behavior and democratic engagement. From 1992 to 2008 she served as a member of the Canadian Election Study team. She is past president of the Canadian Political Science Association and a fellow of the Royal Society of Canada.

Philipp Harfst is Senior Scientist at the Department of Political Science at University of Salzburg. His main research interests include comparative political institutions, institutional change and its consequences, as well as comparative electoral research. His work has been published in Acta Politica, European Journal of Political Research, International Political Science Review, and Journal of Elections, Public Opinion and Parties.

Aaron M. Houck is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Queens University of Charlotte. His research focuses on voting systems and behavior and judicial politics. He teaches courses in law and US politics.

Herrade Igersheim is a Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique Research Fellow at the Bureau d’Économie Théorique et Appliquée. She teaches at the University of Strasbourg. Dealing with philosophy and economics, social choice, or experimental economics applied to voting, her work examines the concept of liberalism of freedom.
Romain Lachat is Assistant Professor of Political Behavior at the Centre for Political Research at Sciences Po, Paris. His research focuses on the comparative analysis of electoral behavior and on political representation. He is particularly interested in the impact of political institutions and party characteristics on individual-level behavior. He has published in Comparative Political Studies, Electoral Studies, European Journal of Political Research, Political Behavior, and West European Politics.

Ignacio Lago is Professor of Political Science at Universitat Pompeu Fabra. His research interests include electoral systems, political behavior, and party politics. He has published in numerous scholarly journals, including Public Opinion Quarterly, European Journal of Political Economy, European Journal of Political Research, Electoral Studies, Party Politics, and Social Science Quarterly.

Jean-François Laslier is a researcher at the Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique. His research interests include mathematical economics, games and social choice theory, and political science. His research focuses on democracy, in particular on voting rules and voting behavior from the formal and experimental points of view. He teaches at the Paris School of Economics.

Isabelle Lebon is Professor of Economics at Caen Normandy University and deputy head of Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique’s Center for Research in Economics and Management. Her research focuses on voting and the efficiency of public policies such as labor market policies, the fight against inequality, and education. She is particularly interested in the behavior of voters facing alternative voting rules through experiments conducted in situ or in laboratory.

Renan Levine is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of Toronto–Scarborough. He has published in the Journal of Politics, Comparative Political Studies, Party Politics, and Journal of Elections, Public Opinion and Parties and has contributed chapters to several edited volumes on Israeli elections.

Peter Loewen is Professor of Political Science at the University of Toronto. He works on questions of elite and citizen behavior and the role of technology in improving governance and representation. He has published in the American Political Science Review, Proceedings of the National Academy of
Contributors

Revised Pages

Sciences, American Journal of Political Science, Journal of Politics, Transactions of the Royal Society B, and Political Communication. He previously served as the director of the Centre for the Study of the United States at the Munk School of Global Affairs and as the director of the School of Public Policy and Governance.

Carolina Plescia is Assistant Professor in the Department of Government at the University of Vienna. Her research focuses on public opinion, electoral behavior and political representation. She is the author of Split-Ticket Voting in Mixed-Member Electoral Systems (2016), and has published in journals such as Electoral Studies, West European Politics, Party Politics, and International Journal of Public Opinion Research. She is currently a member of the Austrian National Election Study.

Daniel Rubenson is Associate Professor of Politics at Ryerson University and an affiliated researcher at the Stockholm Research Institute of Industrial Economics. His research explores political behavior and political economy and uses randomized field experiments to answer questions about political decision making, persuasion, and other behavior. His research has been published in The Economic Journal, Comparative Political Studies, Electoral Studies, and Political Science Research and Methods, among other journals.

Thomas J. Scotto is Head of the School of Government and Public Policy at the University of Strathclyde. His works on strategic voting have appeared in the Journal of Politics and Electoral Studies, and he is the author of Making Political Choices: Canada and the United States (2009). His recent research focuses on public attitudes on matters of foreign policy and international affairs.

David Sparks is Director of Basketball Analytics for the Boston Celtics. He holds a doctorate in political science from Duke University, where his research focused primarily on political parties, ideology, multidimensional scaling, and social network analysis.

Laura B. Stephenson is Professor of Political Science at the University of Western Ontario. Her research interests are based in political behavior and the effects of institutions, including issues of partisanship, voting, and the relationships among voters, parties and electoral systems. Her research has been published in Electoral Studies, Political Psychology, the Journal of Elections, Public Opinion and Parties and the Canadian Journal of Political Sci-

Karine Van der Straeten is Research Director at the Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique at the Toulouse School of Economics and scientific director of the Institute for Advanced Study in Toulouse. Her research interests include political economy, experimental economics, and formal political science. She has published in the British Journal of Political Science, Experimental Economics, and the Journal of Public Economics. She is coauthor of Racism, Xenophobia, and Distribution: A Study of Multi-Issue Politics in Advanced Democracies (2007). She is a member of the editorial boards of the American Political Science Review and the Journal of Experimental Political Science.

Tom Verthé is Postdoctoral Assistant at Ghent University’s Centre for Local Politics and guest professor at the Vrije Universiteit Brussel. He previously served as research manager for the PartiRep Interuniversity Attraction Pole. His work has appeared in Party Politics, Journal of Elections, Public Opinion and Parties, Italian Political Science Review, and Res Publica. He has also contributed chapters to several edited volumes.