Publishing Blackness has passed through several potential versions before settling in its current form. We have been grateful throughout to George Bornstein, for initiating this project for Michigan's Editorial Theory and Literary Criticism Series, and for helping to shepherd the book through the production process. We also thank the volume's contributors, for the depth and range of their insights and for their patience along the way. We have appreciated the questions and objections from the Press's three anonymous reviewers, each of whom helped to make the final product stronger. Finally, we have been lucky to work with Thomas Dwyer and other members of the University of Michigan Press staff, including Christopher Dreyer and Alexa Ducsay.
