Acknowledgments

It bother me to even think that I could not or would not be able to send out one of the thing that I have built my life upon and that is to be grateful. I wish to send all my thanks to those who have made this book possible by giving me the support I need, and my apologies to those I may miss naming.

First of all I wish to thank Frances Wells for the many hours we sit together in her dinen room with paper all over the table while she tried to stumble over my bad hand writing and spelling. She finally got the hang of my writing and could read it better than I. I all way say I can’t understand my own writing once it get cold.

Secondly, my thanks goes out to Erin Cone who spent hours away from her own studies, some time half the night, typing and staring into the computer until the key and word began to run together.

Thirdly, to Lolissa Moores and her husband who encourage me to send this script to a publisher and refuse to give up when one turn it down. And to T. V. Drake, who is now decease, but incourage me to take a chance. He believed it would be good because someone, someday, might want to know how life really was in my early years of the Depression.

To my uncle A. J. Stimpson who furnish a lot of information about my folk. Since he is my father brother he could pin point some of the event that taken place. Thanks to all my docent friends at the Heritage Farmstead where I volunteer, who continues to incourage me to keep up the good work.

To my aunt Bessie Davis who furnish information on my mother side of the famley. She is my mother sister.

To Pastor Charles and Debby Leach, from New Life Bible Institution in Pleasant Grove, who offer prayer each day at Bible Study for me and the success of the book.

To Betty Neal, R.N., who monitor my health each day.
A special thanks to my niece Brenda Brooks for pulling some of my stories together. Thanks to my daughter, Donna Okaro, who would so often tell me to rest my eyes and take a brake and go to sleep. And to her husband, Michael Okaro, who come in at midnight from work and wake me up with pen in hand and on the paper.

Another special thanks to my sister Ruth Polk and her husband Dewey Polk. Ruth, who furnish a lot of information about our famley and herself and also was my worse critic about what I was writing. Many a night she would turn the light out and tuck me in and the next day she would tell me I need to take a few days off and rest. She would tell her husband Dewey to take me fishing for a few days so I could get my mind off writing so much and relax a while. Yet she was very incouraging and supporting in my writing. Thanks sis.

To my artist who did a grate job drawing and sketching while I try to tell the story, and the hard time she had with me giving instruction on how and what used to be. Thank you Burnice Breckenridge. And to her husband Mr. Breckenridge for his support in incouraging me and his wife whose pictures helped tell the story.

It would not be fair to leave out Frances Wells intire famley for the encourgement they gave me to keep writing. They stood by their mother while she pull together and edit my manuscript with tired fingers and strained eyes and long, long hours. She never grumble, but in her silence, while reading what I had wrote, would at times brake out in a chuckle and a laugh. This would happen when she read one of the funny parts such as “You had to watch my sister Bessie Lee like a hawk watching a chicken.”

To all of my supporters, I thank you. And I would like to offer my apologies to those I may have missed.
