Connecting Continents

Seetah, Krish

Published by Ohio University Press

Project MUSE. muse.jhu.edu/book/99405.

For additional information about this book
https://muse.jhu.edu/book/99405

For content related to this chapter
https://muse.jhu.edu/related_content?type=book&id=3126335

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 International License.
Acknowledgments

THIS VOLUME HAD ITS naissance in a workshop organized at Stanford University in 2014. Therefore, the authors and I would like to thank the following for their generous sponsorship of the workshop: James Ferguson and Ellen Christensen, Department of Anthropology; Emily Saidel, Stephen Hinton, and Program Director Sarah Curran of the Stanford Arts Institute Programming and Events Grant; Kären Wigen, Department of History; Thomas Blom Hansen and Sangeeta Mediratta, Center for South Asia; Sean Hanretta and Laura Hubbard, Center for African Studies; Burçak Keskin-Kozat, the Sohaib and Sara Abbasi Program in Islamic Studies; Norman Naimark, Stanford Global Studies Division; and Lynn Meskell and Julia Hitchcock, Center for Archaeology. I owe an additional debt of thanks to Professor Meskell, who was unfailing in her support of the workshop, and who generously provided her time as well as guidance during its organization.

We would also like to thank Richard Roberts, Thomas Blom Hansen, and Sharika Thiranagama for serving as discussants at various points in the workshop, providing insights from their own important research that helped to enrich our conversation. We are also very grateful to the Cantor Museum for screening the two unique and insightful documentaries that formed an important component of the workshop.

In my capacity as editor, I owe a personal note of thanks to those listed above, and of course, to the contributing authors for their excellent work. They not only gave of their time and expertise during the workshop, but universally kept up the momentum to deliver their respective chapters and thus bring this volume to fruition. Furthermore, I am very much in debt to my student, Emily Kent, who was good enough—at very short notice—to step in and work tirelessly on reviewing and consolidating the chapters as the volume neared completion. However, my most heartfelt thanks must go to the eminent professor Richard Allen. He not only provided invaluable insight during the workshop, but was critical throughout the development of the volume, helping numerous contributors to refine their chapters and personally mentoring me through the complex process of publishing an edited book. As a collective, we are deeply grateful to Professor Allen. Given all the hard work and the unique and groundbreaking research that follows, I am highly optimistic that the volume will have the impact on scholarship we have all strived to accomplish.