CONTRIBUTORS

Luisa Del Giudice is director of the Italian Oral History Institute, visiting professor of Italian folklife at UCLA, and president of the International Kommission für Volksdichtung (International Ballad Commission) of the Société Internationale d’Ethnologie et Folklore. She has written extensively on Italian traditional song and on Italian and Italian American folklife, for example, Italian Traditional Song (1989, 2nd. ed. 1995), Il canto narrativo al Brallo (1990), Studies in Italian American Folklore (edited, 1993), Cecilia: testi e contesti di un canto narrativo tradizionale (1995), and Performing Ecstasies: Music, Dance, and Ritual in the Mediterranean (edited with Nancy Van Deusen, forthcoming).

Gerald Porter, senior lecturer in English at the University of Vaasa in Finland, has written extensively on political and vernacular song. His The English Occupational Song (1992) is the first full-length study of the subject. His latest book is Dangerous Crossing. Papers on Transgression in Literature and Culture, edited with Monica Loeb (1999).

Tom Cheesman is lecturer in German at the University College of Swansea. His monograph on the German Bänkelsang (or broadside), The Shocking Ballad Picture Show, appeared in 1994.

Cozette Griffin-Kremer does research in the folklife of Great Britain, Ireland, and France, with a specialization in the popular calendar system and the history of preindustrial technology (dairy and other food products, the relation between work and ritual, space management). She is currently a research associate at the Centre de Recherches Bretonne et Celtique, Université de Bretagne Occidentale, Brest.
Reimund Kvideland, of the University of Bergen, Norway, has been president of SIEF (Société Internationale d’Ethnologie et de Folklore) and of the International Society for Folk Narrative Research (ISFNR). He was director of the Nordic Institute of Folklore, Turku, Finland, from 1991 to 1997. He was founder and editor of the journal Tradisjon and has published on folktale, legend, children’s folklore, folksong, and related topics. Together with Henning K. Sehmsdorf, he edited Scandinavian Folk Belief and Legend (1988), Nordic Folklore: Recent Studies (1989), and All the World’s Reward: Folktales Told by Five Scandinavian Storytellers (1999).

Sadhana Naithani teaches at the Centre of German Studies, Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi. Her M.A. thesis dealt with the cultural politics of the German left and her Ph.D. dissertation (1993) treated “The Politics of Love: A Study of the Depiction of Woman-Man Relationships in German Folk Songs.” Most recently, she has been working on “The Coloniser Folklorist” and the ideologies of early European folklorists working in India.

Vaira Viķe-Freiberga (Viķis-Freibergs) was professor of psychology at the University of Montréal when this paper was written. She is currently president of Latvia and now spells her name in its grammatically feminized version. She is a noted authority on the singing traditions of Latvia, has edited The Linguistics and Poetics of Latvian Folksongs (1989), and has created, in collaboration with her husband Imants Freibergs, professor of computer science, a vast computer-based corpus of Latvian dainas.