In the journey that led to this book, we had many guides and helpers along the way. Our book was conceived as a companion volume to Water Wise: Native Plants for Intermountain Landscapes, published by Utah State University Press in 2003, and we owe a debt of gratitude to the authors of that book, especially Wendy Mee and Jared Barnes, for leading the way toward an all-native intermountain landscape aesthetic.

Jennie Bear and Dale Torgerson were involved in early stages of development of the design graphics for this book.

We want to thank the following individuals for “beta-testing” the penultimate draft of the manuscript: Cindy Turner, Alisa Ramakrishnan, Stephanie Carlson, and Tara Forbis. We also thank Phil Allen and Larry Rupp for providing helpful professional reviews, along with two anonymous peer reviewers.

The section of the book entitled “Native Landscape Pioneers Tell Their Stories” was authored by several different people who brought a variety of perspectives to their essays. We would like to thank them for responding to our request for participation in spite of a short turnaround time and for doing such a good job of describing their experiences: Phil Allen, Jan Nachlinger, Randall Nish, Carl Dede and Angie Evenden, Ann DeBolt and Roger Rosentreter, Roger Kjelgren, and Bettina Schultz.

We are grateful to the following organizations for responding to our call for grant support to help defray printing costs for this book, enabling us to keep the price within reach of ordinary people: Utah State University Center for Water Efficient Landscaping; Utah Native Plant Society Utah Valley Chapter; Intermountain Native Plant Growers Association; Central Utah Water Conservancy District; Jordan Valley Water Conservancy District; and Weber Basin Water Conservancy District.

We especially want to thank Michael Spooner of Utah State University Press for inviting us to write this companion volume, and for his patient shepherding of the project throughout its long evolution.
Lastly, we thank Bettina Schultz, who not only did an excellent job illustrating the book, but also provided countless hours of informal editorial service, as well as emotional support and counseling along the way.
