Beautiful Lesson of the I
Brent, Frances

Published by Utah State University Press

Project MUSE. muse.jhu.edu/book/9873.

For additional information about this book
https://muse.jhu.edu/book/9873

For content related to this chapter
https://muse.jhu.edu/related_content?type=book&id=358705

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 International License.
Hundreds of characters: bare chested men with banners and effigies, wailing women, rioting children, flying spirits, soldiers, skeletons, horses, dogs, vomited fish and rotting eels.

Setting: The scene is shaped horizontally in layers, part carnival, part apocalypse. Atmosphere of a toy theater with skirmishes on the street and pandemonium in the galleries. Smoke, Chinese kites, baskets, fish net, balloons, gold and rose-colored fog.

Stage effects: Candle for smoke, toy guns and gun powder when rifles discharge, a large fan creates the noise of wind.

Music: drums, penny whistles, shooting

As the curtain rises, there is shouting and moaning, all speaking at once. Some are vomiting, some throwing piss pots, soldiers curse.

The Fisherman’s Wife rages at a Soldier but the Soldier is shut up in his own confusion.

Little Man in the Upper Gallery (he’s pushing the head of another man into a basket): Revenge!

Thoughts of the Fisherman’s Wife: I cut the fish and the fish heads as though they were melons. They floated in water.

Soldier: She’s kicking the empty bucket!

Child in the Street: Now we’re lost.

I don’t recognize any of these faces or buildings.

Narrator (pointing left and right): Do you see how it’s possible to change, but perhaps not completely?
Can you see the feather lurking in the fish bones?