A robin will pose in a child’s aim and surrender its feathered body, claws, tail, black and white throat.

Some children learn quickly the living robin hops, cocks its head, tugs night crawlers and sings.

Other children hold death in their hands, eager to poke the vacant eyes, hang the stiffening body on their mind’s wall.