Postmodern Legal Movements

Minda, Gary

Published by NYU Press

Minda, Gary.
Postmodern Legal Movements: Law and Jurisprudence At Century's End.
NYU Press, 1996.
Project MUSE. muse.jhu.edu/book/76295.

For additional information about this book https://muse.jhu.edu/book/76295
Advance Praise for the Book

“An exceedingly well-informed look at the most important trends in legal scholarship today. Anyone interested in the variety of approaches and controversies now moving those who study the law in America will learn much from this book. An excellent, readable presentation of the most controversial and difficult ideas about law and legal culture.”  —David Kennedy
Professor of Law, Harvard Law School

“A sophisticated account of the main American jurisprudential schools of the late twentieth century. Breathtaking in its sweep and meticulous in its detail. Minda’s nuanced approach reveals the myriad links that unite and differentiate various kinds of legal thought as they struggle wittingly (or not) with the advent of their own postmodern condition. He has produced an insightful discussion of the adventures, successes, anxieties, and foibles of the American jurisprudence of the late twentieth century. An eminently readable book—the only one of its kind offering such a rich and rewarding journey.”  —Pierre Schlag
School of Law, University of Colorado

“This is the book my Jurisprudence students have been requesting for years; it will be required reading. In addition to writing an outstanding resource for students, Professor Minda has contributed an important work to current legal scholarship, synthesizing the many diverse movements of American jurisprudence into a coherent narrative that leads to postmodernism and the future.”  —Stephen M. Feldman
School of Law, University of Tulsa

“Gary Minda’s provocative interpretation of the development of modern American legal thought deserves the attention of all who are interested in understanding the state of jurisprudence in the 1990s.”  —Mark Tushnet
Professor of Law, Georgetown University Law Center

Gary Minda is Professor of Law at Brooklyn Law School.