Contents

Acknowledgments xi

1. Introduction 1
   Masochism and the Slave Image 6
   What Is Russia? 15

2. Some Historical Highlights 18
   Religious Masochism 18
   Early Observers of Russian Masochism 28
   The Slavophiles 37
   Masochistic Tendencies among the Russian Intelligentsia 42
   Masochism and Antimasochism 50
   Recent Developments 60

3. Two Key Words in the Vocabulary of Russian Masochism 66
   Smirenie 66
   Sud’ba 69

4. Masochism in Russian Literature 78
   Selected Masochistic Characters 78
   Dmitrii Karamazov 84
   Tat’iana Larina 86
   Vasilii Grossman’s Thousand-Year-Old Slave 89

5. Ontogeny and the Cultural Context 93
   Clinical Developments since Freud 94

vii
CONTENTS

Is Masochism Gendered?  102
The Masochist's Questionable Self and Unquestionable Other  106
Normalcy and Cultural Variation  112
The Swaddling Hypothesis Revisited  116

6. The Russian Fool and His Mother  122
A Surplus of Fools  122
Ivan the Fool  127
The Fool and His Mother  129

7. Is the Slave Soul of Russia a Gendered Object?  134
Patriarchy Conceals Matrifocality  137
Ambivalence toward Mothers  140
Suffering Women  144
Suffering from Equality  159
The Double Burden and Masochism  163
The Male Ego and the Male Organ  168
The Guilt Factor  174
Late Soviet and Post-Soviet Developments  177

8. Born in a Bania: The Masochism of Russian
Bathhouse Rituals  181
Cleansing Body and Soul  182
Digression on Russian Birches  184
The Bania-Mother  189
The Prenuptial Bath  193

9. Masochism and the Collective  202
What It Means to Be a Zero  202
Sticking One's Neck Out in the Collective  206
A Post-Soviet Antimasochistic Trend?  210
Some Theoretical Considerations  211
Submission to the "Will" of the
Commune in Tsarist Russia  215
Aleksei Losev: Masochism and Matriotism  225
Berdiaev's Prison Ecstasy  227
A Blok Poem: Suffering Begins at the Breast  230
Dostoevsky's Maternal Collective  234
10. Conclusion  245
Notes  249
Bibliography  291
Index  319