Kimbanguism

Published by Penn State University Press

Kimbanguism: An African Understanding of the Bible.
Project MUSE.   muse.jhu.edu/book/58796.

For additional information about this book
https://muse.jhu.edu/book/58796

For content related to this chapter
https://muse.jhu.edu/related_content?type=book&id=2116879
This book would never have been published without the help and input of Professor Vincent Wimbush, who not only suggested a new approach for my research, but also welcomed me into his Institute for Signifying Scriptures and gave my work a home in the Signifying (on) Scriptures series at Penn State University Press. I am immensely grateful and indebted to him. I am also deeply appreciative of the help, suggestions, and understanding of Kathryn Yahner, acquisitions editor, and Hannah Hebert, editorial assistant, at Penn State University Press, who accompanied me through the editing process with as much kindness as professionalism.

I have been encouraged by the interest of colleagues who invited me to present and discuss my research in their departments: Professor Thee Smith of Emory University, Professor Maha Marouan of the University of Alabama, Emerita Professor Rosa Bobia of Kennesaw University, and Professors Marla Brettschneider, Carol Conaway, Penny Moreau, Courtney Marshall, and Faina Bukher of the University of New Hampshire. Your support has been greatly appreciated.

I am also indebted to Professors Michael Gomez of New York University, Drew Smith of Pittsburgh Theological Seminary, John Jackson of the University of Pennsylvania, Edith Bruder of SOAS, Zekeh Gbotokuma of Morgan State University, Clément Akassi of Howard University, Pamela Gay-White of Alabama State University, David Garbin of Kent University, and Metka Zupancic and Emeritus Professor Michael Mendle of the University of Alabama. Each of you has been a steadfast friend, and your support has always been highly valued.

By introducing me to sociology and supervising my research at the University of Rennes 2, Emeritus Professor Pierre-Jean Simon has been a crucial influence and a real mentor. My fellow researchers at the Groupe société, religions, laïcité of the French national research center (CNRS) hosted by the University of Paris, Sorbonne, are also deserving of thanks for their interest in my work and their encouragement. I am especially grateful to Professors Philippe Portier, Jean Paul Willaime, Jean Baubérot, Sébastien Fath, Joëlle Allouche-Benayoun, and Martine Cohen.

Emeritus professor Georges Balandier expressed interest in my work and encouraged me to publish it in the United States; I was very honored when he offered to write a preface for this book, but health issues unfortunately made this impossible. Professor Elikia M’Bokolo helped by inviting me to speak on his radio program, Mémoire d’un Continent, on Radio France Internationale, thus making my work more visible, and by organizing a historic international conference in Kinshasa called “Simon Kimbangu, the Man, His Work, and His Contribution to the Liberation of Black People,” which successfully connected the work of scholars with that of the members of the Kimbanguist Church.

I am also extremely grateful to the leaders of the Kimbanguist Church, particularly the spiritual leader Simon Kimbangu Kiangani for his support and encouragement, and Maestro Armand Diangienda Wabasolele for his interest, the interview he gave me, and his invariable helpfulness. I am indebted to King Kipula Nsimba Wise for his help with information and pictures of the Kimbanguist Symphonic Orchestra; to Gabriel Nzau Ngoma Wagaza, who generously shared archival material and images he took as the church’s official photographer with PRESKI until 2001; and to the many interviewees, especially the late David Wabeladio Payi and Véronique Kabeya, as well as the other inspired people and church members who answered my questions with honesty and confidence. Jérôme Makiadi, Enock Mban, Sylvain Mbote Munzila, Adrien Fwakasumbu Luwawanu, and Joseph Shiassia honored me with an invitation to be a guest of the first Kimbanguist Book Fair in the greater Paris area. My longtime friends Saturnin Ngoma, Gody Dia Kongo, Fortuné Mboussa, Darius Azika-Eros, David Biangué, and Erick Siassia have been helpful and supportive. May all the Kimbanguist community find here the expression of my heartfelt appreciation.

My final thanks are for my family: my wife, Dr. Cécile Coquet-Mokoko, introduced me to Professor Wimbush and prioritized the translation of my manuscript into English; our two sons, Antoine Elikia and Vincent Luka, were patient during the years-long process of writing and revising the manuscript, which kept their father engrossed in his work. I am also grateful to my sisters, Madeleine Ambembé, Antoinette Mabouéré, and the late Jeanne N’Gania; my brothers, Joseph, Gustave, Roger, and Blanchard Mokoko; and all my relatives for their unwavering helpfulness and support.