Pauulu’s Diaspora

Quito J. Swan

Published by University Press of Florida

Swan, Quito J.
Pauulu’s Diaspora: Black Internationalism and Environmental Justice.
Project MUSE. muse.jhu.edu/book/74869.

For additional information about this book
https://muse.jhu.edu/book/74869

For content related to this chapter
https://muse.jhu.edu/related_content?type=book&id=2591178
ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Thinking, dreaming, researching, and writing this book has been a tremendously challenging but richly rewarding journey. Some years ago, I told students in one of my classes at Howard University that this acknowledgements section would be difficult to write. Little has happened since then to ease my doubts about being able to adequately address all of the debts that I have incurred while completing this project. Indeed, the list of the individuals, communities, and institutions that supported my research journey across the Atlantic, Pacific, and Indian Ocean worlds is longer than rope.

Sincere gratitude goes out to my incredible editor Sian Hunter and her colleagues at the University Press of Florida, including Richard Feit, Marthe Walters, and Amanda Price. Sian was unbelievably patient in ushering me toward the finish line. Iconic scholars Gerald Horne and Akinyele Umoja somehow found the precious time to read the manuscript; without question, their constructive feedback made this book stronger. Thanks also to Ellie Camlin and Melissa Hyde for proofing and indexing the work.

A number of fellowships, grants, and awards facilitated research across the United States, Bermuda, London, Kenya, Australia, Fiji, Papua New Guinea, and Vanuatu. A 2004 Sasakawa Foundation Peace Fellowship sponsored time at London’s National Archives. A 2013 library fellowship at Indiana University was essential for the Liberia chapter—thanks to Verlon Stone, Valerie Grim, and John and Judy Gay for their precious assistance. A 2013 Andrew Mellon summer fellowship supported research at Howard’s Moorland-Spingarn Research Center; thanks to the Center’s Joellen Elbashir, Ishmael Childs, Alhaji Conteh, Howard Dodson, Richard Jenkins, Ida Jones, Lopez Matthews, Kenvi Phillips, and Sonja Woods. A 2014 Howard University Faculty Senate Scholarship and Creativity award helped facilitate travel to East Africa.
A 2014 Project for African Decolonial and Indigenous Knowledges (PADIK) intensive writing fellowship at Kenya’s Jomo Kenyatta University for Science and Technology (supported by Kansas State University and Kenya’s African Institute for Capacity Development) allowed me to conduct research in Kenya’s National Archives. I am truly gracious to PADIK’s Tushabe wa Tushabe, Tinu Maduagu, Besi Muhonja, Mickie Mwanzia-Koster, and Cheikh Thiam for the wonderful opportunity to workshop parts of the manuscript—majekobaje.

A 2014 National Endowment for the Humanities Fellowship for University Faculty supported months of fieldwork across Oceania. Sincere thanks goes out to the helpful curators, archivists, librarians, administrators, and staff at Fiji’s National Archives and National Library, the libraries of the University of the South Pacific (Suva and Vila), Vanuatu’s National Archives (particularly Anne Naupa) and National Library and Museum, Australia’s National Archives (Canberra), National Library, and State Library of New South Wales, the Australian Institute of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Studies (particularly Michael Dodson and Russell Taylor), Papua New Guinea’s National Archives and National Library, and the archives of the University of Papua New Guinea.

Elegba meets Muai. In Fiji I was hosted by Lea Lani Kinikini and Salesi Kauvaka, two incredible activist scholars from Tonga. Captain Huey, although we did not complete the journey from Fiji to Vanuatu, I learned much as a deckhand on your yacht. Vanessa Griffen and Claire Slatter, I cannot express enough gratitude and admiration for your years of activism and for my warm reception in Suva; you both gave far much more than I could have asked for.

In Vanuatu, Rose Coung and Baizum Kamarakafego graciously allowed me to stay in their wonderful home. Special thanks are due to Dominique Hoa Cuong and Leitong Coung and the extended family of Mele village; that includes Chris and Adi Sokomanu. Hilda Lini infallibly chaperoned me across Pentecost, Santo, and Ambae. Daniel Nato hosted me in Malekula. Thanks to the Vanua’aku Pati for providing access to its archives, to BUZZ FM Radio’s Morning Show, and to Edison Mala, Kalkot Mataskelekele, Ati George Sokomanu, Peter Taurakoto, and Barak Sope for the remarkable interviews.

In Australia, special thanks are due to Gary Foley, Jenny Monroe, the Redfern Tent Embassy family, DJ K-Note, Patricia Korowa, Kim Kruger, John Maynard, Emily Nicol, and the late Sol Bellear. Patricia, I cannot thank you enough for looking out for me in Sydney. Gary, in my next (next) trip I promise to spend more time in Melbourne. Alex Carter’s generous sharing of primary documents and timely introductions were essential in helping me to navigate Australia’s labyrinth of archives and libraries—much respect.

A 2016 Harry Ransom Center Research Fellowship in the Humanities at the University of Texas-Austin, supported by the Dorot Foundation Postdoctoral Research Fellowship in Jewish Studies, facilitated research for chapter 10. A 2017–18 American Council of Learned Societies Frederick Burkhardt Fellowship at Harvard University’s Radcliffe Institute for Advanced Study provided time and resources for completing the second half of the book. I do not know how I would have survived that year of working on two book projects without the exceptional comradeship of Erica R. Edwards, Steffani Jamison, Deborah Vargas, Quincy Flowers, and Maceo the Titan. Special thanks go out to the Radcliffe’s African-American studies working group—Erica R. Edwards, Francois Hamlin, Shireen Hassim, Steffani Jamison, Chad Williams, Patricia Williams, and Leah Wright Riguere provided critical feedback on chapter 7 (and beyond). Thanks also to my Radcliffe co-fellows, floor mates, administrators, support staff and student research partners, including Doohwan Ahn, Amahl Bishara, Sharon J. Bromberg-Lim, Dean Lizabeth Cohen, Julie Guthman, Jonathan Guyer, Rebecca Haley, Sophie Hochhäusl, Bouchra Khalili, Jodie Mack, Camilo Mendez, Samantha Power, Jackson Gates, and Oya Gursoy. I would also like to thank the staff at the Schlesinger Library, specifically its Curator for Race and Ethnicity, Kenvi Phillips. Thanks also to archivists across Harvard’s Houghton library, UMass-Boston’s Healey library, and David Hale, Associate Archivist and Historian at Goddard College, Vermont.

In Bermuda, Kim Dismont-Robinson, Heather Whalen, and the Department of Community and Cultural Affairs have provided me with platforms to share my work. Thanks to the staff at Bermuda’s National Archives and the Bermuda National Library’s Joanne Brangman. Thanks must also be extended to Nelson Bascome III, Latoya Bridgewater, the late Walton Brown, Colwyn Burchall, Lauren Francis, Iman Gibbons, Max Hull, Tonisha Key-Holmes, Sofia Mohammad, Sherri Simmons, Vejay Steede, Delight Vickers, Lucinda Worrell, and the Pauulu Kamarakafego Grassroots Collective (PKGC) for our collective conversations about Kamarakafego’s significance. to Bermuda and the world. David Tesfa Chapman provided timely feedback on chapter eleven. Former Bermuda Premier Ewart Brown’s generous material support allowed me to launch the Pauulu Project in 2013, which supported travel and the gathering of primary documents for the book.

I have benefitted from having strong mentorship, tough love, and a plethora of support from several remarkable individuals. The short list of those who need to be thanked include Gerald Horne, Charles Jones, Franklin Knight, John Maynard, Yvette Modestin, Merle Brock Swan Williams, Akinyele Umoja, Michael West, and Ben Vinson III. Joseph Jordan had faith that I could complete this project even before I did—his vote of confidence mattered much.

Much of the ideas for this book were conceived, rinsed, and rehearsed during my time in Howard’s Department of History. To the late Selwyn H. H. Carrington, my dissertation advisor, you were right and you are missed. Over the years, I enjoyed the benefits of sharing an office with Emory Tolebert, whose wise counsel and friendship encouraged me to be both a better scholar and person. Elizabeth Clark-Lewis consistently provided me with always welcome and always honest advice—medase. Jeanne Maddox Tonnagara taught me how navigate the university as an institution. Jean-Michel Mabeko-Tali, thanks for constantly reminding me to stay focused on the project. At the Mecca, I had the greatest of colleagues. Special thanks are due to Clement Akassi, Ana Cardoso, Greg Carr, Alem Hailu, Haile Gerima, Jim Harper, Daryl Harris, Joseph E. Harris, Bessie Hill, Charles Johnson, LaShawn Harris, Azaria Mbughuni, Ethelbert Miller, Msomi Moor, Lorenzo Morris, Tonija Navas, Nikki Taylor, and Noelle Trent. Several of my former students (and now often colleagues) informed this project in a variety of ways. These include TaKeia Anthony, Adisa Beatty, Marcus Bellamy, Jocelyn Imani Cole, Loren Collier, Alhaji Conteh, Justin Dunnivant, Lora Hargrove, Araba Evelyn Johnston-Arthur, Kimberly Monroe, Christopher Shell, Latif Tarik, Neil Vaz, Benjamin Woods, and Students Against Mass Incarceration (SAMI).

Chocolate City (Washington, DC) you are missed. Acklyn Lynch, you have been a rock and a true elder—I truly miss our conversations. My brothers Jared Ball, Mark Bolden, and Todd Burroughs, it is always love. Mention must be made to Obi Egbuna, LaTanya Brown-Robertson, Eddie Marshall Conway, Shirikiana Gerima, Tarica June, Diarra Robertson, Chess Girls DC, Chaundi Randolph, Sankofa Bookstore and Cafe, the Sankofa Home School Collective, LAMB PCS, the late Baba Agyei Akoto and Nation
House, Mwiza Munthali and James Pope of Africa Now!, Juan Daniel Morcoima, Dominique Stevenson, We Run Tings, and WPWF radio.

The gratitude list stemming from my ASALH, NCBS, ASW AD, and AAIHS families is a long one. Warm shout outs are due to Maria Hamilton Abegunde, Leslie Alexander, Curtis Austin, Monique Bedasse, Richard Benson, Keisha Blain, Stefan Bradley, Ashley Farmer, Jonathan Fenderson, Ibram X Kendi, Minkah Makalani, Jeffrey Ogbar, Russell Rickford, Robyn Spencer, and Jakobi Williams.

Thanks to all of Kamarakafego’s family members and close comrades who I was able to meet, talk to, and work with, especially Rronniba and Baizum Kamarakafego. Rronniba, my thanks to you does no justice to the level of support that you have granted me. Baizum, bonafide, you are my brother for life. Suzanne Darrell, our meeting in Lahey was short but meant much. Sincere thanks to all those who gave their time, documents, photographs, phone conversations, emails, and interviews. In this regard, thanks to Mama Farika Berhane, Courtland Cox, Sylvia Hill, Jimmy Garrett, John Bracey, and Jeanna Knights. Distinctive thanks are due to Michelle Khaldun, who first introduced me to Kamarakafego in the summer of 1997 in St. George’s, Bermuda.

Indeed, I have had special help on this journey. Mojuba Oludamare, Elegba, Obatala, y Ogun. Seeknfind. My divine dictionary guided me through new words and ways to think about this book and I will always be grateful for that. Baba Kwao, forty days! Marcus Bellamy drove hours with me to see Kamarakafego while he was hospitalized in Massachusetts; somehow the closure of writing the draft of this book also took place there. Louis Woods, our conversations are always grounding. Glenn Chambers, you are the truth brother—keep showing us how to do it. Maryam Sabur—unconditional thanks for your years of labor. Iyelli Ichile—my twin sister—your words and strong medicine always bring me clarity. Furqan Khaldun, hail up Socrates for me; bring the ion cannon and head to the vault. Theodore Francis, give thanks for all the laughs, the reasons, and the prayers—build studio!

I have the honor of having the best parents and wisest siblings in the world. Mom and Dad—Lorraine and Sinclair Swan—you have always been there for me. Niqué, Tamisheka, and Kashima, I love you lot! Momma Phyllis Basden, it is always love. Natalie and Jerodd you have adding so much to our family with your love. The memories of Madge Swan, Kingsley Swan Jr., Sherlyn Swan Caisey, Sherlene Swan, and Walter Brangman live closely with us. Tiante, Tomei, Adanna, Jalen, Jamison, Jordyn, Sabian, and Sebastian, you all know what it is! Akinwunmi, Ifasadun, Ayah, Mariama, and Kairos, you are truly loved and are very special. Ifa and Ayah, your dazzling input was essential to conceiving chapter eight as “Minecrafting a Black World.” Now, who wants some injera?