Tables

2.1. The political economy of regulating cross-border capital flows 38

3.1. New economic theories of global capital flows 60

4.1. Three generations of emerging-market and developing country cross-border financial regulations 81

4.2. Fine-tuning cross-border financial regulations in Brazil 85

4.3. Fine-tuning cross-border financial regulations in South Korea 89

4.4. Effectiveness of capital account regulations in Brazil and South Korea 93

5.1. Regulating capital flows and domestic politics in Brazil 105

5.2. Regulating capital flows and domestic politics in South Korea 111

5.3. Domestic politics and capital controls: Prevailing factors 119

5.4. Domestic politics and capital account regulations in four emerging markets 121

6.1. International Monetary Fund policies on regulating cross-border finance, 2005 and 2012 129

6.2. Political economy of the International Monetary Fund institutional view on regulating capital flows 134

6.3. International Monetary Fund advice on regulating capital flows before and after Lehman crash 138

8.1. Policy space for cross-border financial regulations 170

8.2. Countries most vulnerable to actions against regulating capital flows under the General Agreement on Trade in Services 175

8.3. Nations with the most policy space to regulate capital flows 184
8.4. Countries with US free-trade agreements and bilateral investment treaties, current and pending 185

8.5. Political economy of capital account regulation and the trading system 190

9.1. Pillars of countervailing monetary power 199

Figures

1.2. Political economy of regulating capital flows at the national level 20

3.1. The Mundell-Fleming model 52

3.2. Net capital flows to EMDs and financial crises, 1980–2013 59

4.2. Post-crisis EMD-US interest rate differentials 83

Textboxes

2.1. Capital Controls in the International Monetary Fund Articles of Agreement 34

6.1. Elements of the International Monetary Fund Institutional View of Managing Capital Flows 127

8.1. General Agreement on Trade in Services Modes and Financial Services 172

8.2. Key Provisions of US Bilateral Investment Treaties 178