Acknowledgments

An adequate acknowledgment of the individuals and institutions who have earned my gratitude for their support and encouragement would be embarrassingly long, and so I am more selective than my debts, in all strictness, allow. My colleagues in the Department of Rhetoric at the University of California, Berkeley, have created an electrifying environment for writing and teaching at the crossroads of the humanities and social sciences, and it is a pleasure to acknowledge their stimulus. Students from many disciplines, both undergraduate and graduate, prompted me to elaborate and revise some of the ideas and interpretations in play here when I tried them out in classes, seminars, and informal discussions. I am particularly grateful to David Dahl and Elizabeth Maddock Dillon, who served as my research assistants. William E. Connolly, Roger Haydon, and Janet S. Mais aided and abetted the transmutation of manuscript to book, and Stanley Aronowitz, Jane Bennett, Thomas L. Dumm, Philip Kubsinski, Michael Shapiro, and Dana R. Villa provided incisive readings. I benefited greatly from a sabbatical leave supported by a Humanities Research Fellowship from the University of California at Berkeley and from a fellowship from the Doreen B. Townsend Center for the Humanities (also at Berkeley). Versions of parts of Chapters 3 and 4 appeared in the Canadian Journal of Political and Social Theory 12:8 (1988); Diacritics 20:2 (1990); Contemporary Literature 32:4 (1991), copyright 1991 by the regents of the University of Wisconsin and used by permission of the University of Wisconsin Press; the Massachusetts Review 32:1 (1991), and Ideology and Power in the Age of Lenin in Ruins, ed. Arthur and Marilouise Kroker (New York: St. Martin’s Press, 1991), and I am happy to acknowledge these journals and publishers and their readers, whose responses were stimulating and helpful.

I am by no means certain that those who have put up with my preoccupations would care to be so identified. Nonetheless, for sharing with me their intelligence and wit, and for their constancy, I must thank, in some cases a second time: Marianne Constable, Maureen Dolan, Tom Dumm, Vicky Elliott, Phil Kuberski, Avital Ronell, and Dana Villa.
