This research was funded by the Alexander von Humboldt Foundation as part of the research award for Sharon Macdonald’s Alexander von Humboldt Professorship, and was carried out at the Centre for Anthropological Research on Museums and Heritage (CARMAH) at the Department for European Ethnology, Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin. I also received financial support from the German Academic Exchange Service (DAAD), the International Scholarship Program Staatliche Museen zu Berlin, and the École des Hautes Études en Sciences Sociales (EHESS) in the form of an ‘Aires culturelles’ scholarship, all of which I acknowledge gratefully.

Without the support of those who let me participate in their museum life this work would not exist. I thank all of those at the Ethnological Museum Berlin who shared their everyday jokes, thoughts, and reflections with me, and in particular Paola Ivanov, without whom none of what follows would have been possible. My gratitude for being made welcome at the Museum extends to the Museum’s and the Humboldt Lab Dahlem’s entire staff, but in particular to Jonathan Fine, Ulrike Folie, Silvia Gaetti, Boris Gliesmann, Peter Junge, Viola König, Ute Marxreiter, Caroline Nüser, Hendryk Ortlieb, Romuald Tchibizo, Hans-Joachim Radosuboff, Eva Ritz, Verena Rodatus, Andrea Scholz, Andrea Schubert, Angelika Tunis, Agnes Wegner, Anja Zenner. Mathias Alubafi and Romuald Tchibozo were also working in the Museum at the time, and I want to thank them for their research and generous contribution to Object Biographies. Concerning my work at the Royal Museum for Central Africa, I would like to thank in particular Christine Buard, Hein Vanhee, Bart Deputter, and Brigitte Cornet for letting me participate in the crafting of the museum’s permanent exhibition. I thank those who agreed to do interviews with me for sharing their experience and thoughts with me. Many of their reflections have become crucial points of departure for my analysis, as well as personal learning. I want to thank in particular Clémentine Deliss, Billy Kalonji, Wayne Modest, and Nanette Jacomijn Snoep for the ongoing conversation.

I am grateful to my PhD supervisors Sharon Macdonald and Béatrice Fraenkel for their continuous, encouraging, and critical engagement with this research, and their support – on all levels – for getting my research done.
Your committed reading, editing, and discussion of my research have enriched and guided this work substantially. Béatrice, you accompanied me through the ups and downs of this research, always with encouragement, great advice, and care. Sharon, I don’t know how to put my gratitude into words. Sometimes it feels like you read my work more than I did. You taught me how to write. Thank you.

The academic support of Sophie Houdart and Ann Laura Stoler as members of my comité de thèse, as well as of Charlotte Klonk during a time of institutional floating also remain unforgotten. I want to thank Emmanuel Grimaud and Kerstin Pinther, James Clifford and an anonymous reviewer for their valuable reflections on this research. For their editorial work on my text, I want to thank Danielle Carter, Theresa Clasen, Deborah Cohen, Christopher Feeney, and Frank Lange.

I don’t think I would have survived the period of writing without my dear colleagues at CARMAH. I would especially like to thank Larissa Förster, Christine Gerbich, and Jonas Tinius for their ongoing interest in this research – the most original thoughts in this book certainly stem from them. I also thank my other most wonderful peers-turned-friends with whom I shared the pleasure of reading and writing: Aida Baghernejad, Ulrike Gerhardt, Friederike Landau, Yann LeGall, Antonia Wagner, and Patrick Wielowiesjki. I am grateful to Stefanie Weißmann for her continuous and laborious efforts to establish the Co-tutelle contract. I want to thank Ama Walton for legal advice and mentoring.

The research seminar ‘Réécrire le passé colonial: enjeux contemporains des collections de musée’, as well as the related doctoral atelier at the EHESS Paris, accompanied my research for several years and the exchange with its many guests and my co-organisers Felicity Bodenstein, Damiana Otoiu, Anna Seiderer, Benoît de L’Estoile, Dominique Poulot, and Laurella Rincon contributed significantly to my research and reflections.

Other than this wonderful professional context which appears in its outlines through the names I have listed, I thank my family, my love, and my friends. To make it short: I am surrounded by love, warmth and strength which I cannot account for, and the simple thought of what you have given me makes me shed tears of joy.
