African Archaeology Without Frontiers

Published by Wits University Press

Sievers, Christine, et al.
African Archaeology Without Frontiers: Papers from the 2014 PanAfrican Archaeological Association Congress.
Project MUSE. muse.jhu.edu/book/51607.

For additional information about this book
https://muse.jhu.edu/book/51607
Contributors

Please consult the ORCiD registry for further information on our authors. www.orcid.org

Adrianne Daggett received her PhD from Michigan State University in the US. Her research examines variations in social and economic organisation during the Early Iron Age of Botswana. She is presently working for the South Carolina State Historic Preservation Office.

South Carolina State Historic Preservation Office, Columbia, South Carolina
Email Address: daggetta@gmail.com

Matthew Davies is a lecturer in African Studies at University College London. He has been involved in a range of archaeological and anthropological research projects and co-directs the Marakwet farming project in Tanzania with Henrietta Moore. He was previously assistant director of the British Institute in Eastern Africa and a Leverhulme Fellow at the University of Cambridge.

African Studies Research Centre for Multidisciplinary and Intercultural Inquiry, University College London
Email Address: matt.davies@ucl.ac.uk

Philip de Barros is professor of Anthropology and coordinator of the Archaeology programme at Palomar College at San Marcos in California. His research interests lie in ceramic typology and seriation, cultural resource management, cooperation between archaeologists and Native Americans, evolution, the iron-working societies of West Africa, especially the Bassar of northern Togo, and the effects of the rise of iron working on societal complexity.

Behavioral Sciences Department, Palomar College, San Marcos, California
Email Address: pdebarros@palomar.edu
Laure Dussubieux is a research scientist at the Field Museum, Chicago. She specialises in determining the composition of ancient artefacts made from synthesised or natural glass, metals and stones, using laser ablation to study their provenance and circulation.

Elemental Analysis Facility, The Field Museum, Chicago, Illinois
Email Address: ldussubieux@fieldmuseum.org

Amanda Esterhuysen is associate professor in the School of Geography, Archaeology and Environmental Studies at the University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg. Her research focuses on material remains, oral and recorded histories and archival documents, as well as contemporary issues of identity politics and the role played by archaeologists in the present. She has worked extensively on excavating Historic Cave in the Makapan Valley, Limpopo province.

Department of Archaeology, School of Geography, Archaeology and Environmental Studies, University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg
Email Address: amanda.esterhuysen@wits.ac.za

Caleb Adebayo Folorunso is a professor at the University of Ibadan with a particular interest in ethnoarchaeology, historical archaeology and heritage management. He has carried out extensive research in parts of the Benue Valley of Nigeria and has done archaeological contract work in Nigeria.

Department of Archaeology and Anthropology, University of Ibadan, Ibadan
Email Address: cafolorunso@gmail.com

Tim Forssman is a postdoctoral fellow at the Rock Art Research Institute at the University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg. His research interests are forager–farmer contact, forager economies, trade dynamics and rock art.

Rock Art Research Institute, University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg
Email Address: tim.forssman@gmail.com

Festo W. Gabriel completed his PhD at the University of Pretoria in 2015. He is currently a lecturer and researcher in history and archaeology at Stella Maris Mtwara University College, a constituent college of St Augustine University of Tanzania.

Stella Maris Mtwara University College, Mtwara
Email Address: festogabriel@gmail.com
Timothy Kipkeu Kipruto directs the Marakwet Research Station in north-west Kenya. He is a trained forester with more than a decade of experience working on anthropological research. For the last four years, he has been at the forefront of day-to-day research in Marakwet and contributes extensively to project design in the African Farming Network.

Marakwet Research Station, The British Institute in Eastern Africa, Nairobi
Email Address: timothy.kipkeu@biea.ac.uk

Chapurukha M. Kusimba is professor of Anthropology at American University, Washington DC. His research focuses on the evolution of trade, urbanism and leadership in eastern and south-eastern Africa and the Indian Ocean. He has published widely on the archaeology, economy, history and technology of preindustrial Africa and the Indian Ocean.

Department of Anthropology, American University, Washington DC
Email Address: kusimba@american.edu

Gabriella Lucidi graduated from California State University San Marcos summa cum laude with a Bachelor's degree in anthropology, and is presently working as an archaeologist for the State of California Department of Parks and Recreation.

Department of Parks and Recreation, Sacramento, California
Email Address: GabbyLucidi@gmail.com

Elinaza Mjema received his PhD from Frankfurt University in Germany and is currently a lecturer at the University of Dar es Salaam, Tanzania. He is a maritime-historical archaeologist and his research focuses on reconstructing ancient and recent maritime communities’ culture along the East African coast.

Department of Archaeology and Heritage, College of Humanities, University of Dar es Salaam, Dar es Salaam
Email Address: ehifadhi@gmail.com

Freda Nkirote M’Mbogori is assistant director at the British Institute in Eastern Africa and a member of the Marakwet research team. She was previously head of the Cultural Heritage Department at the National Museums of Kenya. Her research interests include the Iron Age period, environmental archaeology and Bantu studies.

British Institute in Eastern Africa, Nairobi
Email Address: freda.nkirote@biea.ac.uk
Contributors

Henrietta L. Moore is director of the Institute for Global Prosperity at University College London and chair of Culture, Philosophy and Design. Her area of expertise is anthropological theory, gender and African studies. She has worked with the Marakwet of Kenya for more than 30 years.

Institute for Global Prosperity, University College London
Email Address: igpdirector@ucl.ac.uk

Akinwumi Ogundiran is professor of Africana Studies, Anthropology and History at the University of North Carolina, Charlotte, where he also serves as chair of the Africana Studies Department. His scholarly interests and publications focus broadly on the archaeology and cultural history of the Yoruba, Atlantic Africa and the African Diaspora.

Department of Africana Studies, University of North Carolina, Charlotte, North Carolina
Email Address: ogundiran@uncc.edu

Emuobosa Akpo Orijemie holds a PhD in Environmental Archaeology from the University of Ibadan, Nigeria. His research interests are palynology and archaeobotany. He is presently a Newton Postdoctoral Fellow at the McDonald Institute for Archaeological Research, University of Cambridge.

Department of Archaeology and Anthropology, University of Ibadan, Ibadan
Email Address: orijemie5@yahoo.com

Karim Sadr is professor in the School of Geography, Archaeology and Environmental Studies at the University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg. His research interests include the transition from hunting to herding in southern Africa, precolonial stone-walled structures, the use of geographic information systems and remote sensing in archaeology, as well as lithic technologies.

Department of Archaeology, School of Geography, Archaeology and Environmental Studies, University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg
Email Address: karim.sadr@wits.ac.za
Alex Schoeman is a senior lecturer in Archaeology in the School of Geography, Archaeology and Environmental Studies at the University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg. Her research focuses on the archaeology of farming communities in South Africa. She directs the National Research Foundation African Origins-funded Bokoni farmscapes project.

Department of Archaeology, School of Geography, Archaeology and Environmental Studies, University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg
Email Address: alex.schoeman@wits.ac.za

Dirk Seidensticker studied prehistory, palaeoanthropology and geology at the University of Tübingen, Germany. He is a PhD student at the University of Cologne in Germany where his research focuses on the archaeology and history of Iron Age settlement in the north-western Congo Basin.

eScience-Center, Eberhard Karls University, Tübingen
Email Address: dirk.seidensticker@gmail.com

Chrissie Sievers lectures in the School of Geography, Archaeology and Environmental Studies at the University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg. She works on the identification, analysis and interpretation of fruits and seeds in archaeological deposits. Since 1998, she has studied material from the Sibudu Cave in KwaZulu-Natal, contributing plant identifications and experimental work to a collaborative project that has been able to identify the earliest archaeological evidence of bedding in the world.

Department of Archaeology, School of Geography, Archaeology and Environmental Studies, University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg
Email Address: christine.sievers@wits.ac.za

Katie Smuts is an archaeologist and manager of the National Inventory at the South African Heritage Resources Agency (Sahra). She is responsible for the maintenance and development of Sahra’s integrated heritage management platform and its database of sites and objects known as Sahris (South African Heritage Resources Information System).

South African Heritage Resources Agency, Cape Town
Email Address: ksmuts@sahra.org.za
Contributors

Narcisse Santores Tchandeu received his PhD in Art History from the University of Yaoundé I in Cameroon. He is assistant lecturer in the Department of Art and Archaeology and deputy head of the section Arts Plastiques et Histoire de l'Art. He is associated with the Institut de Recherche pour le Développement in France, working on ancient cultural heritage.

Department of Art and Archaeology, University of Yaoundé I, Cameroun
Email Address: tchandeunarcisse@yahoo.fr

Nic Wiltshire is an archaeologist with a Master’s degree from the University of Cape Town. He specialises in geographic information systems, rock art, heritage management and software development. Nic was responsible for the development of the heritage management platform Sahris (South African Heritage Resources Information System).

Cedar Tower Services, Plumstead, Western Cape Province
Email Address: nic.wiltshire@cedartower.co.za

Marilee Wood is an independent researcher and honorary research associate in the School of Geography, Archaeology and Environmental Studies at the University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg. She specialises in tracing and analysing glass beads that were traded in Africa before European beads became common. She received her PhD from Uppsala University, Sweden.

School of Geography, Archaeology and Environmental Studies, University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg
Email Address: mwood@rockisland.com