A Note on Quotations

Unless otherwise noted, all references to Henry James’s fiction are to The Novels and Tales of Henry James, The New York Edition, 24 vols. (New York: Scribner’s, 1907–9). These references appear in the text by volume and page number.

References to Henry James’s literary criticism, including the prefaces to the New York Edition, are to the two volumes Literary Criticism: Essays on Literature, American Writers, English Writers and Literary Criticism: French Writers, Other European Writers, The Prefaces, ed. Leon Edel and Mark Wilson (New York: Library of America, 1984); these references appear in the text with the respective abbreviations LC 1 and LC 2.

References to William James, The Principles of Psychology, ed. Frederick Burkhardt et al. (Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1983) appear within the text, along with the abbreviation PP when context alone does not make clear the source of the quotation.

All emphases within quotations appear in the original; they are not my own.
