AN INTERNATIONAL Postgraduate Research Award, University Postgraduate Research Award, and Overseas Postgraduate Research Scholarship funded by the University of Sydney and the Government of Australia allowed me the time to complete the research and early drafting of this study. A semester’s research leave from the City University of New York allowed me the time to complete part of the writing of it.

Many friends and colleagues encouraged me along the way. Colleagues who generously commented on parts of the work include Paula Backsheimer, Judith Barbour, Nicholas Birns, Deirdre Coleman, Simon During, Penelope Ingram, Bill Maidment, Anne McCarthy, J. Hillis Miller, Ariadna Pop, Véronique Pouillard, Simon Petch, and Joseph S. Walker. I thank John Maynard for having been a friend and supporter of this project, and its author, for many years. I also thank former CUNY Chancellor Matthew Goldstein for his support. My teachers, especially Christopher Braider, David Bromwich, Jacques Derrida, Jean-François Lyotard, William Maidment, J. Hillis Miller, Thomas Richards, Mark Rose, and Alan Trachtenberg, had profound effects on the shape that this argument took. I thank the many people who responded with probing questions and comments when portions of this book were presented as talks at the University of Sydney, Columbia University, and the CUNY Graduate Center.

I thank for their assistance Eva Ksiazek and Peter McNiece of the University of Sydney’s Fisher Library, as well as the staffs of Columbia’s Butler Library and Diamond Law Library, the New York Public Library, Yale’s Sterling Library and Goldman Law Library, Cambridge University Library, and the library of St. John’s College, Cambridge.

I would also like to thank Sandy Crooms, my editor at Ohio State University Press, for her unflagging and unfailingly congenial support of this study and the anonymous reviewers of the Press for their many helpful suggestions.

I gratefully acknowledge permission to reprint material from essays originally appearing in boundary 2, Dickens Studies Annual, Genre, and Victorian Literature and Culture. This material has been extensively revised.

I thank my loving wife Caroline for her humor and help at crucial stages near the work’s completion. This book is dedicated to my parents, Amarjit Singh and Raghubir Kaur Bisla. I thank them for their unshakeable confidence over the years.
