This project would probably have never been accomplished without the help of many people. My deepest appreciation goes, thus, to all those that I will not be able to name in these short acknowledgements.

I owe a special thanks to a number of people whose guidance were both a challenge and an inspiration: Monika Brodnicka whose shadow haunts every line of this journey. She breathed life in this book with all her being; Jeffner Allen an outstanding teacher, an amazing mentor, a caring friend, a meticulous advisor, and an inspiring guide whose reading of each part of this book was essential to the final product; Nkiru Nzegwu, who introduced me to the discipline of African Studies and instilled in her students the values of serious and rigorous scholarship; Souleymane Bachir Diagne whose reading of the first version of the book led to a more focused hermeneutics of Senghor’s philosophy; Olufemi Taiwo, whose close reading of the manuscript and ongoing mentorship has enabled me to grow as a scholar; Kwaku Korang for a critical reading of the second chapter of the book that helped me write the introduction; Adeleke Adeeko, whose advice relieved me from the major writer’s block that was stopping me from finishing the conclusion of the book; my reviewers for their challenging comments; the editors at The Ohio State University Press, namely, Sandy Crooms and Malcolm Litchfield, for their professionalism and their ongoing support in this journey.

I thank the Clark Fellowship at Binghamton University for giving me the means to complete my graduate education; for this I am deeply grateful. I also thank West Africa Review for giving me the permission to publish an earlier version of the first part of Chapter 2 and the Departments of French and Italian and African American and African Studies at The Ohio State University for giving me the opportunity to carry this project to this stage. Special thanks are due to my friends and colleagues in the department of Modern Languages at Linfield College. Linfield will always be my home away from home.

Last but not least, my biggest thank you goes to my family, Maignon, Papa Thiam Maam, Khayou, Mbetou; the gracious and late Ndeye Codou; the late Modou; Ndeye Marame, my first love; Papis; Lewinsky, the unbearable lightness of being; Sarr Ousmane, for always being here for me; Ndiouga, for your incommensurable love; Oumar, the wise man; Gouf, the real brother; Fifi, my only sister; Maty, Tico, Papi and Sidy, Iba and Codou, Sarah and Ama, Sidy, Sédar, and Mossane, who represent our future.
