So I timed my arrival to make an X.
At the intersection you were on the other side.
I smiled like the city bus between us.
A sick, fluorescent smile.
In that moment my coat blew open—
half-slip hiked around my waist, my hair I hoped a wave of grain. This is not a weekend feeling.
I am holding my heart against my chest.
In the city of just me I am unanimous.
You know who you are.
