Acknowledgments

I am indebted to many people and institutions for providing me with support. With a deep sense of gratitude and respect, I acknowledge the sisters and archivists of the women's religious congregations: Sisters Campion Kuhn, CSC; Kathryn Callahan, CSC; Georgia Costin, CSC; and Julie McGuire, CSC, of the Sisters of the Holy Cross in Notre Dame, Indiana, along with Carolynn Landgrebe; Sisters Mary Kraft, CSJ, and Charlene Sullivan, CSJ, of the St. Paul, Minnesota, and St. Louis, Missouri, provinces of the Sisters of St. Joseph of Carondelet; Sister Francisca Eiken, CCVI, of the Sisters of Charity of the Incarnate Word in San Antonio, Texas; and Sister Eileen A. Kelley, SP, of the Sisters of Providence of Saint Mary-of-the-Woods in Terre Haute, Indiana. The personnel of the Hesburgh Memorial Library at the University of Notre Dame, particularly Charlotte Ames and the staff in the university archives, helped me identify the many sources in American Catholic history. I am also grateful to the Daughters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul, Marillac Provincial House, St. Louis, Missouri, who provided a copy of Mother Xavier Clark's “Instructions for the Care of the Sick,” and to Christopher J. Kauffman, who recommended this rich source. Thanks also to Stan Larson and Walter Jones in the Special Collections Department, Manuscript Division, University of Utah Libraries, Salt Lake City, Utah; the staff at the Utah State Historical Society, Salt Lake City, Utah; personnel at the Catholic Archives of Texas, Austin, Texas; Chris Floerke and Dolores B. Olivarez at the University of Texas Institute of Texan Cultures at San Antonio; Jean Denham at the Memorial Hospital Archives, South Bend, Indiana; and the Indiana Center Province Archives, Notre Dame, Indiana.

The project was shaped by the intellectually stimulating environment at the University of Notre Dame. The history department offered continued support through all my endeavors. Christopher Hamlin was the best advisor and mentor anyone could ever have. Besides sharing his expertise, he always was encouraging, enthusiastic, and available, and it was a pleasure to be his student. I have also benefited from the guidance of R. Scott Appleby, Gail Bederman, and Suellen Hoy, all of whom shared their time and their wealth of knowledge.

I also extend a special thank-you to Susan Strasser, Philip Scranton, and Roger Horowitz who organized a conference sponsored by the Center for the History of Business, Technology, and Society at the Hagley Museum and Library in 2001. Entitled Commodifying Everything: Consumption and the Capitalist Enterprise, this conference brought together scholars from multiple disciplines. I especially want to thank Keith Wailoo for his comments on my paper presentation and for helping me to see that nuns’ charitable and economic roles did not have to be mutually exclusive. I acknowledge Routledge for their permission to use excerpts from my chapter in the book that resulted from this conference: “Healthcare as Product: Catholic Sisters Confront Charity and the Hospital Marketplace, 1865–1925,” which appeared in Commodifying Everything: Relationships of the Market (Routledge: © 2003), 143–68, ed. Susan Strasser, reproduced with permission of Routledge/Taylor & Francis Books, Inc.

This book reflects discussions at other scholarly conferences and sessions. I have learned much from comments by Christopher J. Kauffman, Ronald L. Numbers, Sister Mary Denis Maher, Sister Mary Oates, Conevery Bolton Valencius, and the Women’s Studies Brown Bag group at Purdue University.

Praying Very Hard All Day,” which appeared in Holistic Nursing Practice 17, no. 6 (© 2003): 320–28, reproduced with permission from Lippincott, Williams, and Wilkins.

Several sources provided financial support. As a graduate student, the history department at Notre Dame was generous in granting me fellowships and travel funds for research trips. Early manuscript preparation and research were supported by grants and/or fellowships from the Irish American Cultural Institute in Baltimore, Maryland; the Cushwa Center for the Study of American Catholicism at the University of Notre Dame; the Center for Nursing Historical Inquiry at the University of Virginia School of Nursing; the American Association for the History of Nursing; and Purdue University.

I owe a great debt to those colleagues who have given freely of their time, expertise, and unfailing support. I never would have undertaken a history project without the initial suggestion and mentorship of JoAnn G. Widerquist at Saint Mary’s College in Notre Dame, Indiana. I was encouraged at the University of Notre Dame by Dorothy Pratt, Nicole Mishe Gothelf, Kathleen Sprows Cummings, Jane Hannon, and Estelle McNair. I also want to acknowledge Joan Lynaugh and Barbara Brodie for their support of my desire to merge historical study with nursing; the editors from The Ohio State University Press; and Sioban Nelson and Heather Munro Prescott, reviewers of this book, for their important comments and suggestions that influenced my thinking and interpretations.

Although too numerous to name, I want to thank colleagues at Purdue University School of Nursing. Lynn Holland’s editorial assistance was invaluable. The final stages of the manuscript preparation would have been indefinitely delayed if it had not been possible to at least partially limit my academic responsibilities. Julie Cowan Novak and Linda Augustin Simunek allowed me that time, and Taunya Rapisarda and other colleagues willingly stepped in to cover for me whenever I needed help.

My final comments are for friends and family. Cynthia Cantwell and Kathy Yayboke deserve recognition for their friendship and the encouragement they extended over many years. I acknowledge the love, guidance, and tireless support of my parents, Billy and Jean Mann, and Debra Mann, my sister and great friend. My son, Austin, has given me more delight than he will ever know. His wonderful sense of humor has helped me through writer’s block, computer panics, and numerous frozen dinners. Most of all, I want to thank my husband, Robyn. He has been the best supporter, friend, and critic, and his expert editorial marks can be seen throughout the book. Without him, it would not have been completed, and to him it is dedicated.
