The New Woman and the Empire

Jusova, Iveta

Published by The Ohio State University Press

Jusova, Iveta.
The New Woman and the Empire.
The Ohio State University Press, 2005.
Project MUSE. muse.jhu.edu/book/28270.

For additional information about this book
https://muse.jhu.edu/book/28270

For content related to this chapter
https://muse.jhu.edu/related_content?type=book&id=1152574
I appreciate the support I have enjoyed through my affiliation with several institutions—including Miami University, Wittenberg University, and Antioch College—while working on this book. I am particularly indebted to the Graduate School and the English Department at Miami University, Oxford, Ohio, for a dissertation scholarship, which facilitated much of the research and scholarship upon which this project eventually came to be based. I was very fortunate to have supportive and enthusiastic advisors who offered insightful feedback on earlier versions of several chapters of this book. My heartfelt thanks go to all of them: Kerry Powell, Mary Jean Corbett, Howard Blanning, and Linn Dietrich. Kerry has always been more than happy to share his expertise in late-Victorian theatre with me, and I am grateful to him. To Mary Jean Corbett, I owe a special debt—for her close reading and copyediting of earlier versions of this book, as well as her generous sharing of her knowledge of feminist and post-colonial scholarship and Victorian literature.

I am also indebted to Susan Morgan for first introducing me to the work of Edward Said and to Brit Harwood for guiding me through the maze of psychoanalytic theories. Very special thanks go to my advisor, mentor, and dear friend, Frank Jordan.

Thanks are also due to the research librarians and the circulation staff of Miami University and Wittenberg University for helping me locate and for handling what must have been hundreds of books over the years. Further, I would like to thank the archivists of several special collections for their assistance with photo reproductions. For permission to reproduce the photograph of Sarah Grand, I am grateful to the National Portrait Gallery in London. The photograph of Elizabeth Robins is reproduced with the permission of the Royal United Kingdom Beneficent Association (UK Charity Ref 210729), the Backsettown Trustees, and the Elizabeth Robins Papers, MSS 2, Fales Library & Special Collections, New York University.

Very special thanks go to Katharine Solomon, Amy Levy’s grand-niece, for her kind permission to reprint the photograph of Levy, as well as to Linda Hunt Beckman for generously helping me locate the Levy picture and for kindly allowing me to use her own electronic copy of the photo. I am also grateful to Professor Hunt Beckman for reading and commenting on the Levy chapter.

Earlier versions of the Grand and Egerton chapters appeared in ELT 43:3 (2000) and in Tulsa Studies in Women’s Literature 19:1 (Spring 2000). I would like to thank Robert Langenfeld of ELT and Holly Laird of Tulsa Studies for allowing me to use substantial portions of the articles in my book. I am also indebted to the anonymous readers of these journals for providing me with critical feedback, which considerably sharpened my thinking and writing about Grand and Egerton.

Heather Lee Miller, acquisitions editor at The Ohio State University Press, has been an ideal editor. I am very grateful to her for her faith in this project and for her generous help, patience, and support. Furthermore, Margaret D. Stetz and Ann Heilmann could not have been more encouraging, enthusiastic, and helpful readers. I am extremely indebted to them for their insightful suggestions and enthusiasm for this book.

This project could not have been completed without the support of my friends and family. Particularly warm thanks go to Pavithra Narayanan for keeping it all in perspective and for always encouraging me to think about the Victorian times in terms of what it all means for the present day.

Finally, I would like to express my gratitude to my husband and colleague, Dan Reyes. He has not only been a supportive companion through it all but has always been ready to read, discuss, copyedit, and provide invaluable feedback on my work. This book is dedicated to my parents and to Dan.