Roman Fever
Elsden, Annamaria Formichella

Published by The Ohio State University Press

Elsden, Annamaria Formichella.
Roman Fever: Domesticity and Nationalism in Nineteenth-Century American Women’s Writing,
Project MUSE. muse.jhu.edu/book/28375.

For additional information about this book
https://muse.jhu.edu/book/28375

For content related to this chapter
https://muse.jhu.edu/related_content?type=book&id=1178133
CONTENTS

Acknowledgments vii

INTRODUCTION “A Tale of Import So Divine”: New Women in the Old World ix

CHAPTER 1 “I Forgot Myself”: Nation and Identity in Catharine Maria Sedgwick’s Travel Writing 1

CHAPTER 2 Margaret Fuller’s Tribune Dispatches and the Nineteenth-Century Body Politic 25

CHAPTER 3 Domesticity and Nationalism in Harriet Beecher Stowe’s Agnes of Sorrento 46

CHAPTER 4 “How Can I Write Down the Flowers?”: Representation and Copying in Sophia Peabody Hawthorne’s Notes in England and Italy 71

CHAPTER 5 “Closing Her Lips with Gentle Hand”: Domesticated Artists in Constance Fenimore Woolson’s “‘Miss Grief’” and “The Street of the Hyacinth” 95

CHAPTER 6 Roman Fever Revisited 119

Notes 133

Bibliography 145

Index 151