The Chartist Imaginary

Loose, Margaret A.

Published by The Ohio State University Press

Loose, Margaret A.
The Chartist Imaginary: Literary Form in Working-Class Political Theory and Practice.
The Ohio State University Press, 2014.
Project MUSE. muse.jhu.edu/book/35193.

For additional information about this book
https://muse.jhu.edu/book/35193

For content related to this chapter
https://muse.jhu.edu/related_content?type=book&id=1338824
List of Illustrations

Acknowledgments

Introduction: Chartism and the Politics of Form

1 Ernest Jones and the Poetics of Internationalism
   Internationalist and Romantic Traditions
   The Dialectic of the Self and the Social: “A Song for May” (1847)
   Jones’s Oratory and Journalism as a Microcosm of Chartist Poetics
   The Maid of Warsaw (1847–48, 1854)

2 Epic Agency
   Grotesque Epic: Linton’s Bob Thin (1845)
   Spenserian Epic: Cooper’s Purgatory of Suicides (1845)
      Religion as a Mystical Veil on Reason
      Religion as a Divine Cover for War
      Religion as an Antagonist to Learning
      Religion as an Ally of State Repression
   Heroic Epic: Jones’s New World (1851)
3 Revolutionary Strategy and Formal Hybridity in Chartist Fiction

- Somerville’s Dissuasive Warnings (1839)
- “Argus”’s “The Revolutionist” (1840)
- Wheeler’s Sunshine and Shadow (1849–50)
- Generic Doubleness: The Novel as History and Fiction
- Revolution, Not Reform
- Mistakes and Lessons of the First Chartist Convention
- Diametrically Opposed Class Interests
- Uneven Development and the Strike of 1842
- Ironic Success at Kennington Common

Hybridity and Hubris

4 The Gender Legacy: Women in Early to Late Chartist Literature

- 1839: W. J. Linton
- 1842: Mary Hutton
- 1845: Thomas Cooper
- 1852: Ernest Jones
- 1856: Gerald Massey

- Biographical, Literary, and Political Context
- Innermost Circle: Deciphering Linguistic and Marital Concealment
- Intermediate Circle: Frame Narrative as Reader Interpellation
- Outer Circle: Epistolary and Theatrical Address to the Reader
- Conclusion: Medievalism, Gender, Genre, and Epistemology

5 The Politics of Cognition in Chartist Women’s Poetry

- Elizabeth La Mont
- Mary Hutton
- E. L. E., “A Sempstress”

Works Cited

Index