ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This book is ultimately the product of a dissertation completed in the Department of French and Italian at Princeton University. It could not have been written without the support of numerous people. Chief among them is my reader Sarah Kay, whose piercing insight, selfless dedication and tireless good humor helped to keep me going through thick and thin. Simone Marchesi, who read early drafts of the project, also played a pivotal role in its evolution. I have also to acknowledge those who made it financially possible for me to conduct research, including the Department of French and Italian, the Center for the Study of Religion, and the Donald and Mary Hyde Fellowship at Princeton, the Cogut Center for the Humanities at Brown University, and the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation. In addition, I am grateful to the editorial staff at The Ohio State University Press for their very hard work. Last but not least, this project would not have been at all possible without the patient encouragement of my wife Samantha Mahar. To all those who have lent a hand, and to you, the reader, thank you.
