Introduction  Imoinda, Marriage, Slavery  1

Part One.  Imoinda’s Original Shades: African Women in British Antislavery Literature

Chapter 1  Altering Oroonoko and Imoinda in Mid-Eighteenth-Century British Drama  27

Chapter 2  Amelioration, African Women, and The Soft, Strategic Voice of Paternal Tyranny in The Grateful Negro  70

Chapter 3  “Between the saints and the rebels”: Imoinda and the Resurrection of the Black African Heroine  104

Part Two.  Imoinda’s Shade Extends: Abolition and Interracial Marriage in England

Chapter 4  Creoles, Closure, and Cubba’s Comedy of Pain: Abolition and the Politics of Homecoming in Eighteenth-Century British Farce  143

Chapter 5  “‘What!’ cried the delighted mulatto, ‘are we going to prosecu massa?’”: Adeline Mowbray’s Distinguished Complexion of Abolition  185

Chapter 6  “An unportioned girl of my complexion can . . . be a dangerous object.” Abolition and the Mulatto Heiress in England  223