Much of the manuscript was drafted while a Mellon postdoctoral fellow at the McNeil Center of Early American Studies at the University of Pennsylvania. Final revisions were completed at the Institute for European and American Studies, Academia Sinica, Taipei, Taiwan.

Research funding came from the National Science Council (Taiwan), American Antiquarian Society, Huntington Library, and Library Company of Philadelphia. I also enjoyed research privileges at the American Textile History Museum (Lowell, MA), Massachusetts Historical Society, Columbia University Rare Book and Manuscript Library, University of Pennsylvania Van Pelt Library, and Historical Society of Pennsylvania.

I want to thank National Central University for its support and generosity during the decade-plus I have lived and worked in Taiwan. Without the friendship and inspiration of my colleagues in the English Department at NCU, I would not have survived.

My thanks to Senior Editor Sandy Crooms and the staff at The Ohio State University Press for helping bring Reading and Disorder to press after many years of work. I also thank the anonymous reviewers of the manuscript for their effort on my behalf.

Readers and advisors have been many. A short list would include Christopher Looby, Robert Gross, Barbara Hochman, Paul Erickson, Joshua Greenberg, Josephine Ho, Andrew Hoberek, Thomas Knoles, Daniel Richter, James Green, Ping-chen Hsiung, Shirley Teresa Wajda, and Helen Horowitz. Thank you all.

And finally, I want to thank my family, especially my parents, Malcolm and Bianca Stewart, my sisters, Barbara Stewart and Betty Goodfellow, and my wife, Shuling Ko.
